Glacier.
 Monstrous and vainglorious,
 Crystalline majesty seen from the distance.
 Masterful and engulfing
 Reigning Queen,
 She moulds the earth beneath,
 Stabs and shapes the rock,
 Leaves her impressions in the soil,
 Her unique traces.

And once she has gone her way
 The terrain still speaks of her.
 Memories. Daydreams.
 The terrain becomes a story,
 The biography of a once-perfect creatrix.
 Ravine and precipice,
 Maximum and minimum,
 She forms them all to her liking.

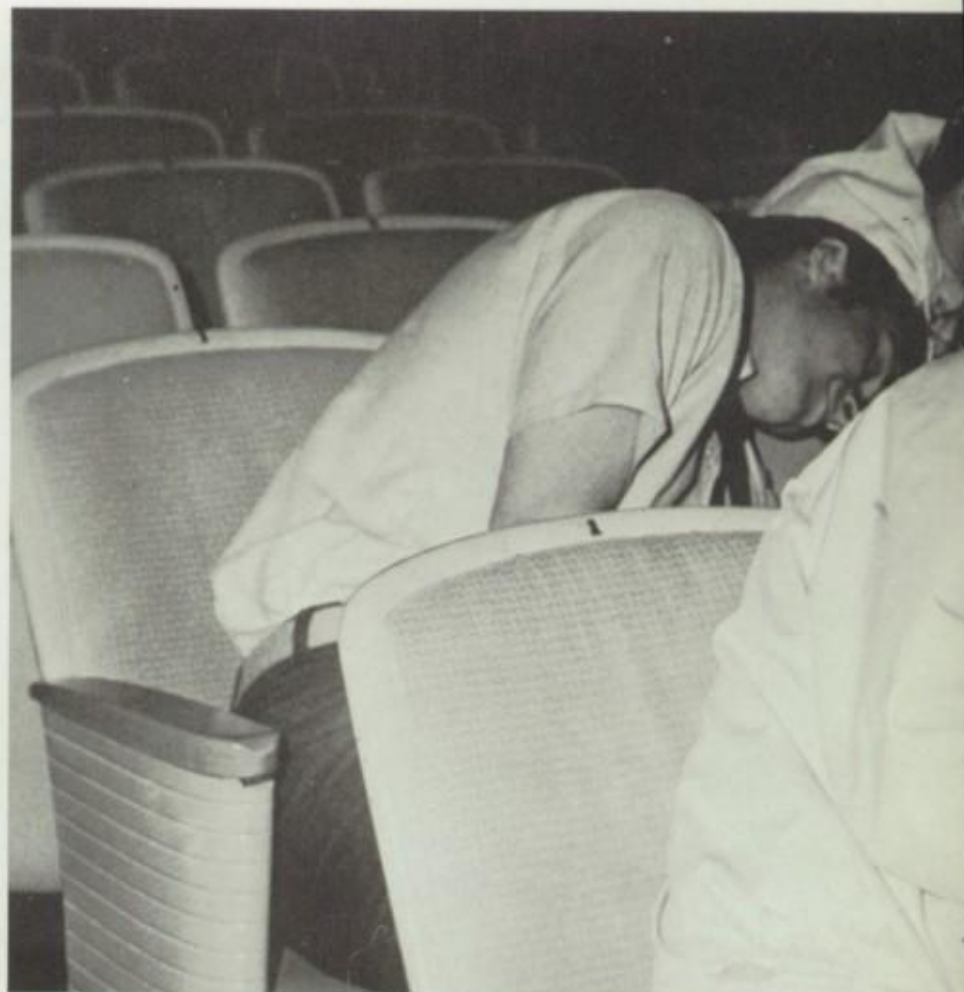

Constant, untiring,
 She works by the moonlight
 And a calendar she knows none.
 Oblivious to the sun and the stars,
 To Julian and Gregorian,
 Does she gorge,
 Moulding painstakingly slowly,
 Moulding perfectly.
 She is an eternity in herself,
 A book's chapter,
 A facet of a lifetime,
 An era.

Such is a school year —
 Unique segment of thin white time.
 She is an epoch,
 Moving so slowly, with such impact.
 She too does leave a mark,
 Impressions never to be erased,
 A glass-encased era.
 We all carve our hills, our peaks,
 Each contributes to the shaping of the valleys,
 All formed so meticulously,
 Formed as only we might do it.

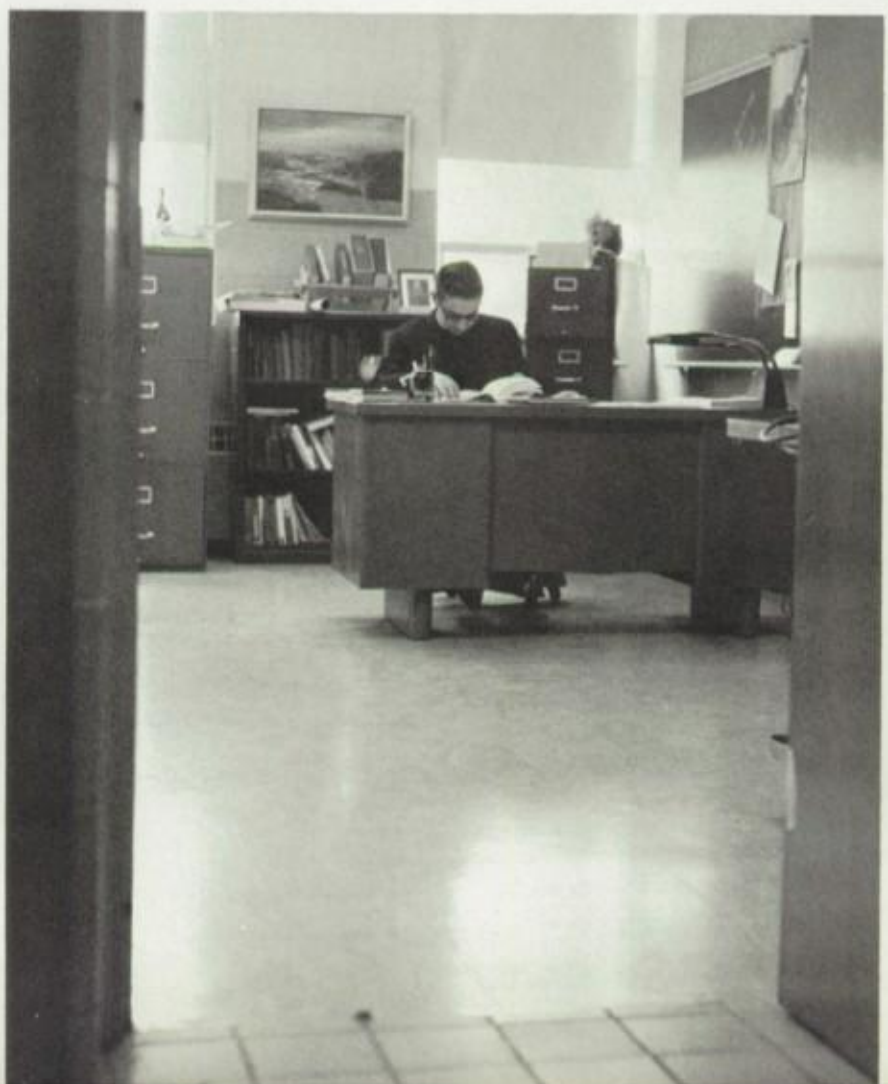

Yes
 It was that weekend.
 A Highlander and a Coke at Scot's
 After some Friday night game somewhere.
 Watching Strez's foot bob spasmodically
 Up and down, all the while
 Preaching of Gertie Stein, The Dial,
 All in a Tuesday morning soliloquy style.
 Taking a glance over at Phil's bio test —
 Just for a second — a coup d'oeil sort of thing.
 Three or four rainy homecoming mornings.
 And you remember when it all began —
 One afternoon you placed in some little box
 A checkmark next to some distant high school
 Foreign language and it was done.
 You grew up with those forty or so faces
 For a while, you remember.
 Nineteen thousand and some dry baseball
 Sweat-out afternoons at Pioneer Park.
 A cup of Nedlog.
 We're selling bus tickets to Friday night's Game at Saint Joe's, Mel's, George's.
 Searching for the logic behind cafeteria prices.
 And though it's sort of foggy now, all of it,
 You can mentally re-meet your few and certain
 Friends some fateful freshman activity period.
 There were those days in Rutschi's
 When everything was so grey and garbled
 You knew he'd call on you like he did.
 Erbach to Allare to Abate to Kivlahan
 And Gill to Herbie to Waz to Render & Sons.
 Fifteen hundred thousand stale locker rooms,
 Activity cards, thuringers, notebooks,
 All pieces of this frigid white monster.

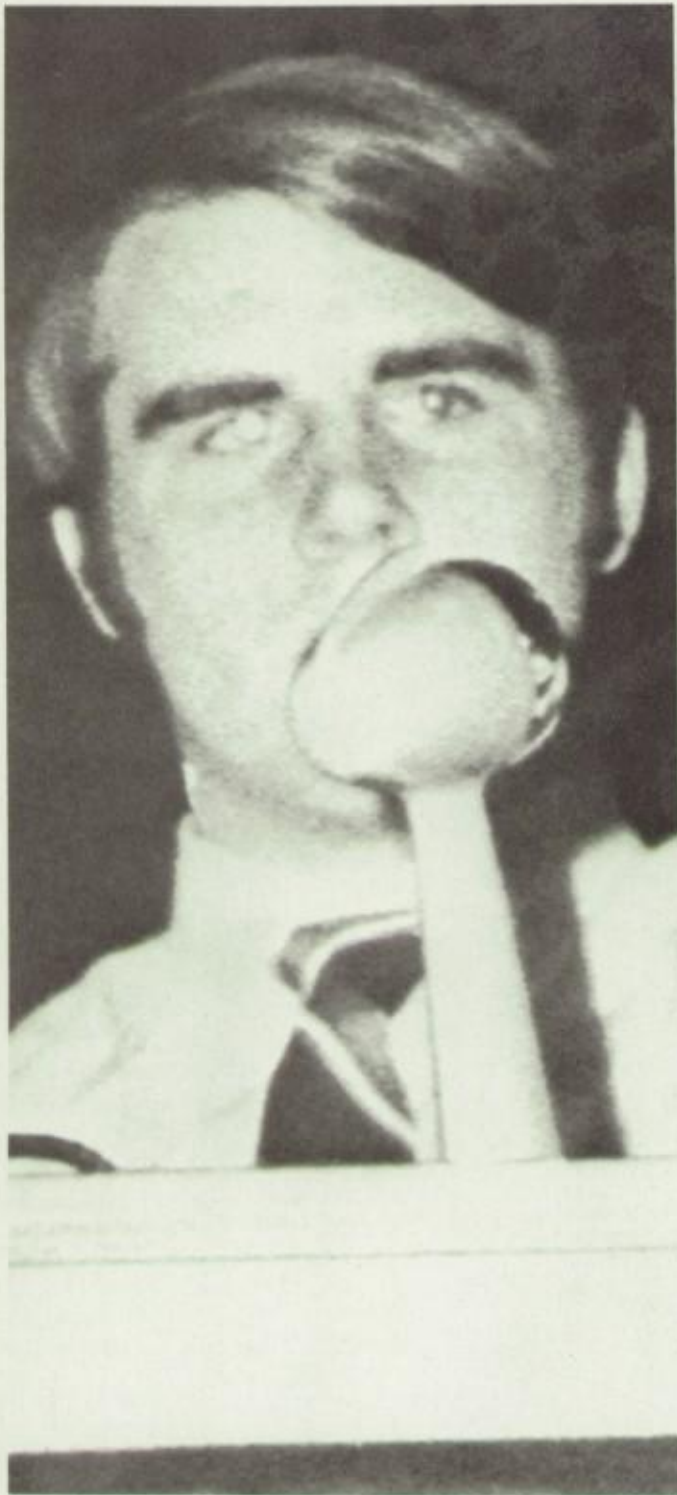

At the end of her reign
 Can be found her trace,
 A handprint in the snow,
 A record of the carvers —
 All that remains.
 Yet all these ripples,
 Ridges in the earth,
 All the dents and mouldings, the gouges,
 This record of activity,
 Is but a dim reflection
 Of the painstaking precision.
 None can re-enact the former glory,
 Pain, the pride and accomplishment
 Of those who went before.

The scholar,
The scientist
Will study her traces Eternities afterwards, I'm sure,
Will take her impressions, her ridges,
Classify and study them,
And might catch a momentary marvel of the beauty,
Might, just for a microsecond,
Experience the intricacy, the uniqueness,
But only we
Will have thrilled to the joy,
Thrilled to the glory of creation.

"Good morning. On behalf of Fr. Michaletz and myself, I'd like to welcome you all back . . . Today will be an abbreviated schedule in which you will have eight minutes for the first two classes and six minutes for every class thereafter. At the end of the day there will be a two-hour assembly for all students in F-101 whereby eighteen or so priests will say the first Mass of the new year, followed by a tea in the library for all new welding teachers . . ."

Yes, a new year, new Steves, Phils and Herbs, new Windmills: new teachers. Classes — lots of keen classes — all neatly computer-piled beneath one's misspelled name on a white and blue card.

What do you have second period? Who've you got for Advanced Paleontology? Number 27? Who's 27? Phil, d'you know who 27 is . . . ?

"And my name is Mr. Teacher, and what did YOU do over the summer . . . hmmm?"

"Well, I, I worked . . . I went to Boise to visit my Uncle Steve."

But their intentions are good, and their rooms are shiny and new and two-toned. And so we begin to listen not really realizing that we are once again a member of some authoritarian system, or for some, once again liberated from one.

Genesis

Forget Peggy, Jim, forget her . . .

The summer is but a dwindling, mistish apparition in the corner. Yes, even good ol' St. Viator has conceded to the roaring appeal of the new educational society. Its fruits: Monsieur Resource Center and a cornucopia of MWF/TR electives. And we look at it . . . and it is good. It is this goodness of soul that enlightens the mind to move one's hand to write the following:

John Q. Student

Math IV 8/29/69 on a piece of Brother Bear's overpriced paper.

Attitude, that's all the question, though it's hard to concern oneself with the formulation of intellectual attitudes after a summer fling in Boise. Irony sense of freedom — air of genuine liberation . . . And we see it, and it is good.

Into the auditorium for a treatise on the Apollo moon landing and all its allegorical ramifications.

Yes, my dear Alphonse, you were right . . . but you were too early. We didn't know . . .

Don't Rain on My Parade

Mr. Cullen takes the boys in the band through a medley of the Hungarian Rhapsody and the 1812 Overture, and other Top 40 hits.

All right, girls, hold it down on the first trumpets, I wanna hear more lower brass, the cheerleaders will probably wanna dance to this so really hit it . . . any time you're ready, Bob.

I can't . . . er, find my music . . .

Okay, people, this is the count — in four, one measure for nothing . . . onetwothreefouronetwoready.

And the band played on. Pep rallies — everybody up and dancing, whole bleachersful swaying to the music — eleven home games, two concerts, first place in our home contest. Authoritative Offstage Voice: Four years ago, sir, there were seven members of the Saint Viator band. Four of these founders have survived to help comprise the present conglomerate numbering thirty-five. Graphically, this presents a 500% increase.

Something new this year, like student recognition.

Yeh, fine, but watch me at the hold. Paul, this time, pleeeeeeze slowly! Watch me, Bob, not the cheerleaders. Listen, people, they wanna hear us play. I wanna hear us play. Therefore, stick it in their respective ears . . . (Note: a band leader has to be sympatico with the rest of the group).

A sports team measures its success in how many games it wins. An organization measures its success in how much it accomplishes in a year's time. The band measures its success in others.

*That's the best you guys ever sounded . . .
new music or something?*

Pre-destined

Omen

"If you stick together, I'll guarantee you a CPL championship when you're seniors." These few words, spoken to a group of forty-five freshmen in '66 just before they took to the field against the freshman De La Salle squad, gave them a goal. At this time, 1969 seemed very remote, a receding horizon.

The man who delivered this prophecy, four years previous to its fulfillment, was Mr. Gliwa, head coach. He saw the day when, playing that same De La Salle team, they would capture the CPL crown.

Remember the fall of '66, the Zidian Era: completely demolish all opposition, finish an immaculate season, unblemished by defeat, unscored upon. The goal still lay ahead.

Head football coach, Mr. Gliwa, and Assistant coach, Mr. Nuccio

Co-captain Denny Foreman (with crutches)

Lion Power . . .

Fall back into the days of 1967: the entrance of the Irish influence. The sometimes fiery, sometimes gentle Mr. Mahoney left an indelible mark on the players, on the entire class of '70. The record books show of a not-perfect but respectable 7-2. The days of the great feast approach.

Autumn of '68 was marred by inconsistency. The cohesion of the previous years was shattered — only a select few could earn starting positions. And 1969 was no longer remote.

In early July a group of not more than twenty-five met at Meadows Park and began what might be loosely labeled "football workouts" (sprinkled soccer and softball.) August 21st was the first day of triple sessions, the first day of real pain, a day of real work.

Paper jungles — blue and white crepe paper curtains — use the whole roll (make it stay up). Napkins, chickenwire, Sanka and spraypaint. Voodoo in the cafeteria, pins thrust into the wax-doll four-leaf clover. Halls immersed in papered spirit. Oh how and why this neat little ball of oddly-formed knots only to be unraveled? Clockwork 'til the flutney:

When a nation, non-profit organization, totalitarian state or a school has remained intact for a good many years, it is fitting and proper that a tradition be established. Thus does the U.S. have Independence Day, Wisconsin have her dairy queen, and Viator its Squamish.

Q. But why is Squamish?

A. It seems that a few years ago some seniors fabricated such a spectacle as a means of injecting a bit o'spirit into the veins of their fellow students.

But the much-heralded third perennial King's International Squamish Tournament lacked the former pompous glory of past Squamishes. It seems we have evolved from the Golden Era of healthy body contact between senior and defender of the pritz, of woomlicks, durmishes, ogres et alii.

Acid Test

The sky is a mass of slowly moving blue and grey patches fusing with one another. And even though the asphalt's kind of slick, despite a field much more wet than moist, they're coming, gathering in the lot. Forget the damp.

Tall red-blossomed lion with polythene coat cracking, thudding in the windy-wet gusts. White sweater brown-haired girl friend socializes, her conversation riveted with occasional bursts aimed at the girl in the blue metallic dune buggy. Semi-soggy running blue streamer, balloons struggling at the ends of sticks, last-minute drying and taping, forming a parade of poster-pasted cars.

An endless sea of heads and shoulders. Faces: the people seem wilder, more vibrant than usual. Remnants of the Conrad Set are sprinkled on the bleachers.

Not the team, not the school, not the crowd, not even St. Pat's entertained the thought of a Viator loss for they were fighting the lion, king of conquest.

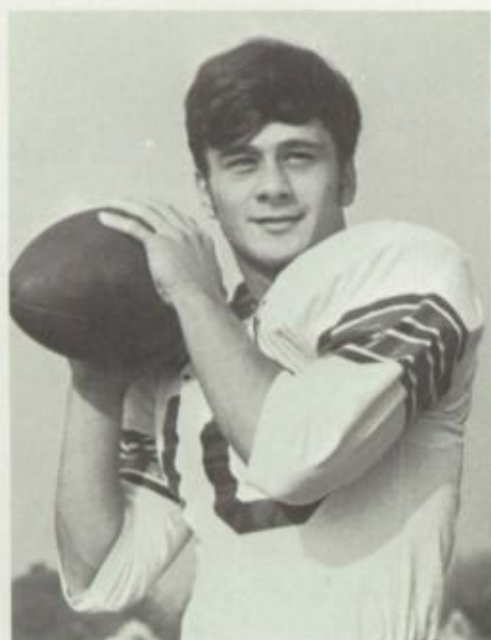

Sweetest victory ever.

Conquest

The first six games dispelled all doubts, any uncertainty. Spirit soaring, maybe a bit too high. Marian sang disaster. No punch, no life. Forgive and forget. Gotta bounce back.

And came the day of Joliet West, your big typical number-four-in-the-state type team. The extra drive, an extra push. 22-14 — Victory for Mr. Nuccio's father who was ill.

Finally the De La Salle jousting — double or nothing. Mr. Gliwa's ghost grins, hums in the background: the fulfillment of a four-year standing prophecy. Joyous tears, superfluous backslappings, running in the locker room. This is it. Loose ends tied. It is consummated.

Laurels

Denny Foreman and Mike Abinanti present Coach Gliwa with team gift.

Fulfillment

Time for quiet recollection, celebration. Mention that pass, honor the specials and stop to realize how quickly it all went by. The only time of the year when cafeteria food becomes banquet. Praises and thanks, a sort of pride flows from the microphone. Spotlight shared by radio announcer George Connor, Mr. Gliwa and co-captain Dennis Foreman. Spotlight on the all-conference team members John Vandenbergh, Pat Mc Grath, Steve Ostermann, Mike Abinanti, Bill Madden, Greg Diem, Ed Klingberg and Mark Rossi. Proud and happy, letter-winner parades to the front, shake a hand or so. Stop to realize: it's over, never to happen just that way again.

There was a certain feeling among the members of the team — unique, different — something which made them even more successful than men of previous years. A closely-knit group, a web of pride, companionship, days of pain, sweat and final glory.

Even the best freshman and sophomore football teams would be overshadowed by a varsity 8-1 record league championship. All the superlatives have been used up. Glowing terms would walk the plank of insincerity.

The freshman have kept alive the Zidian winning tradition with a 4-3-1 record.

The sophomores, under the strategic guidance of their new field marshal, Mr. Sokulski, performed workmanlike tasks before the usual sparse crowds. Feeble only in comparison to the power displayed after their game, they overpowered their peers by habit. The results: 7-2-1.

Certainly these teams are promising. They now vest themselves for battle, on to win future wars.

It's kind of like an athletic sodality, a junior fraternity — sweater, pin, monstrous ornate trophy, white cotton badge rather than an armband — that sort of thing. Dedicated, for-love-of-school loyal and exhausted St. Viator athlete sacked in baggy grey suits by day, muscle-bound blue-sweatered letterman in two-tone wing tips strutting into the movie house flaunting three short tight-skirted heavily made-up blonde maidens sporting peck upon peck of tawdry Persin-Robbins reject about their pretty little necks by night. Isn't it worth pushing back all those bleachers though?

"Why?" I ask so serenely. What mystic supernatural working replaces this proud, confident gridiron Goliath with the mudslinging brat? What motivates the hurler of the baseball or the shotput toward the flinging of rotten eggs, garlic sauce and other such gastronomic niceties? Is the athlete a sadistic beast lurking 'neath this guise of letterman wool? When unable to vent his destructive tendencies on the field of competition, must he resort to this bi-annual bacchanalia? I'm wrecking all the fun of it, I guess.

Over the River and Through the Woods

On, Hermes, on!
Thither lies a sallow horizon:
Long 'yound the riverbeds,
A pace out of the woodland,
and thereon thy goal.
Ah, tiny faded banner
And a slender thread cast
'Cross the finishing gate!
On, Hermes, on.

It's all a matter of timing and constancy, the footsteps creating this evenness, a rhythm, skeleton of mental music. Little room for syncopation. I see such a streak — thick rut of cocoa, ditch of umber, all engulfed in a darkened, dense, pine-menthol sort of green, all rich. Clover clusters, ivy and moss, painted in tall slender streaks of trunk, a huge ravine of black and birch stalk. Occasional hint at that blinding celestial orb of white, of god, shooting among the moving images of leaf and branch as I go mechanically onward. No lung will stand in the way; tiny reserve of adrenaline saved for this special moment. And lost in this huge spinning grope of sod, dust, heavy green, blued dome and sun, a last spurt of consciousness senses that momentary tightness at the chest, and collapse ever-so-joyfully, tearfully.

Some student council president once thought the Guidance Dept. was so keen that he came up with a club to emphasize it. Oversimplify much? Messrs. J.P. Sweeney and Brian T. T. Brady took the reigns, only to be conquered by the more unruly juniors, who, one October activity period, made up a schedule to help weary-eyed guidance counselors during study halls. That's that.

No, Phillip, that's not a Fr. Judd collage or a typical Venture magazine cover, that's the job corps office where they lounge around and find a good solid job for the ambitious wayfaring young men caught in the quandry of life, a world of meaningless numbers. Oh.

The Men of W

Once upon a time, in some dusty corner of Saint Viator, four little imps decided to build a cave. To keep everything neat and symmetric, they put a door on this cave and called it B-221 (the cave? no, the door oh.).

In this cave lay deep dark dastardly (catch the triple alliteration) chemicals, stalactites and such. Since these imps, like all imps, had just a pinch of interior decorator in them, they grew weary of seeing the walls of Viator so barren, lifeless, insipid, drab. Thus they decided to throw their colorful chemicals all over the corridors, providing flair and fancy, pleasing the eye.

Unfortunately, however, this did not make everyone quite happy as the administration complained of the splendidly arrayed mess. Thus did the four put their decorations on posterboard in the form of meaningful messages addressed to the general student body, strewing them lavishly in the hallways. This, of course, made everyone quite happy, excepting those who could not read Sanskrit. This is why, to this very day, that those elves, who have increased in number, call themselves Group W. Okay?

Favorable Forecast

"C'mon, kid!"

Okay, Viator, prepare yourself for a new group of b-ball faces. A long hot summer of workouts at the proverbial "Y" will hardly go unnoticed on the floor. Shadows, ghosts of last year's regionals still linger, still echo, carrying high hopes for the near future. October brings with her the staccato of rubber-thumping hardwood. The court is in session.

Armchair experts quietly scrutinize from the sidelines. Laugh at the frosh falling over his feet in a new drill, the tall skinny kid who just stands there with his arms in the air. Dr. Naismith never intended the game to be played this way.

Six weeks of . . . er, purposeful refining of technique. Pre-season doubts dissolved as the lions dismantled the Quigley North team in the first round of the C.P.L. tournament.

Football fever had infected the roundballers. Facing a well-disciplined St. Pat's team in the midst of their unfriendly gymnasium, the Lions refused to crack under pressure, hanging on for a two-basket triumph. A three-year drought had come to an end: we had beaten the St. Patrick cagers for the second time in our eight-year history.

Fourth place trophy was the eventual fate of the Lions in this tourney. Though a few skeptics remained, a flame of hopeful anticipation was enkindled.

Smoke-rap on the bus. Emancipate, set the mood. Twenty or so spirit entities chipping away at a few brick walls. Togetherness, or openness, or something like that, — a toned down hippie commune. Discuss, eat, wash, pray; in bed with ten gallons of popcorn, a deck of cards, and the girl you left behind. Awaken! Sprint around the track, set the table, and pass the ash tray. Experience the multi-media presentation of relevance and relativity. Discuss, contemplate, relate, put it on the rotisserie. Stereotypes and prejudices are tentatively replaced by trust, compassion, and a new self, fresh out of the bottle with the twist-off cap. No deposit — No return.

And here — caught in this whirlwind, this gargantuan funnel of sock-hop, assembly, regional tournament, and other such high-school-year landmark happenings — do we pay a moment of solemn tribute, heads bowed and eyes in genuflect, to those few paragons of untapped universal knowledge, because of whose academic and intellectual prowess has the student body taken note once again that one of the many purposes of an institution such as a high school is the periodic unleashing of the formative mind, allowing it the freedom to pause at an occasional stream to sup.

The National Honor Society is neither holy, nor Roman, nor an empire, an organization without organization, a society without membership cards or a lounge. During some ordinarily humdrum day in the general office, the alarums are rung, the tympani thunder and the bugles sound the annual unravelling of that glass-encased scroll kept in the selfsame office. (The scroll, you see, lists those people who, through four years of competence at week-end term paper formulation, overnight study material test-cram, and serious artistic and intellectual pursuit, have proven themselves victors in the survival of the academic fittest.)

We have just recently witnessed, my friends, the stiffest intra-class competition ever befallen the community of Saint Viator since its legendary divine genesis, boasting of six National Merit Scholarship Finalists, one very brilliant math trio, and the completion of a most beautiful temple dedicated to the patron saint of the grade point average. You may now return your head to its previous upright position, open your eyes, and assume the normal irreverential posture. Turn the page and skip on to more dances and swim meets.

Contestants Patrick Bosshart, Randall Gocke, and Lionel Goulet in battle.

It all begins with a magic-markered cardboard numeral hanging around your neck some half-conscious January Sunday morning. Wires, monitors, cables everywhere. Very television. Next move two spaces and pass through an hour or two of continuous king and author spilling. All things pass. The Big Three are proclaimed.

A week of cram-your-mind, drain and instant — spill follows. There's really nothing more invigorating than A218 after school, an evening of preparation at the Gocke estate or a quick review at Vince's. My God, remember Eleanore of Aquitaine.

Maybe Monday evenings are always this cold in the Merchandise Mart. Led to the operating room, you see seventeen sacred years of adolescence powdered away leaving only a rosy orange cake of a glow. James II, Lebanon, Pickwick Papers, tangent. From the studio emerges the one, the only, the exhausted Ed Grennan. "It must be rough to do this every day . . ." Van Gogh, ellipse. Fr. Carey doesn't need make-up. Pakistan, Dreiser. I need a john.

Enter enchanting blue and gold pixie. (Pixie tells the rules). Oh and remember: hold your buzzer, pass questions, multiple choice, wait for Ed, speak clearly, grab-bag round, that's Goo-lay, right? Sadists. How can they all aggravate us so, constantly barking, "Take it easy, don't be nervous, stay calm, relax, guys." Exeunt. Appear behind the blue plywoodish stage desks.

Be it concern or the thing to do, Moratorium happened. Indigo and gold wisps of flame lapped by November wind stay flickering all two dozen hours long. Cast across the huge chalked sphere of peace vibrated two gravely motivated silhouettes. Scattered staccatoed chants of spirit-soul all night long tried to dethrone the reigning silence. Let's show that someone that we care.

Oh, the time, she trickles away sooo slowly. Damn. Frigid damn. What theory of a frozen hell? Boy-man! Does one, can one really think when that is all there is to do? Turn, rotate, roll-up. The claws, icy fingers of Mother Nature scratch the naked flesh, tearing, burning, ahhh — only a few more minutes. So this is being concerned. Moment of subdued exhilaration. Dip into that bottomless pit of thought, of emotional perception. Another minute. Two trench-coated shadows escape the fire's grasp and are soon replaced by two more rookies. Ah, there it is, that glow — you know, just after you've done something good.

"Jumpin' Jack" Cavers works toward pin.

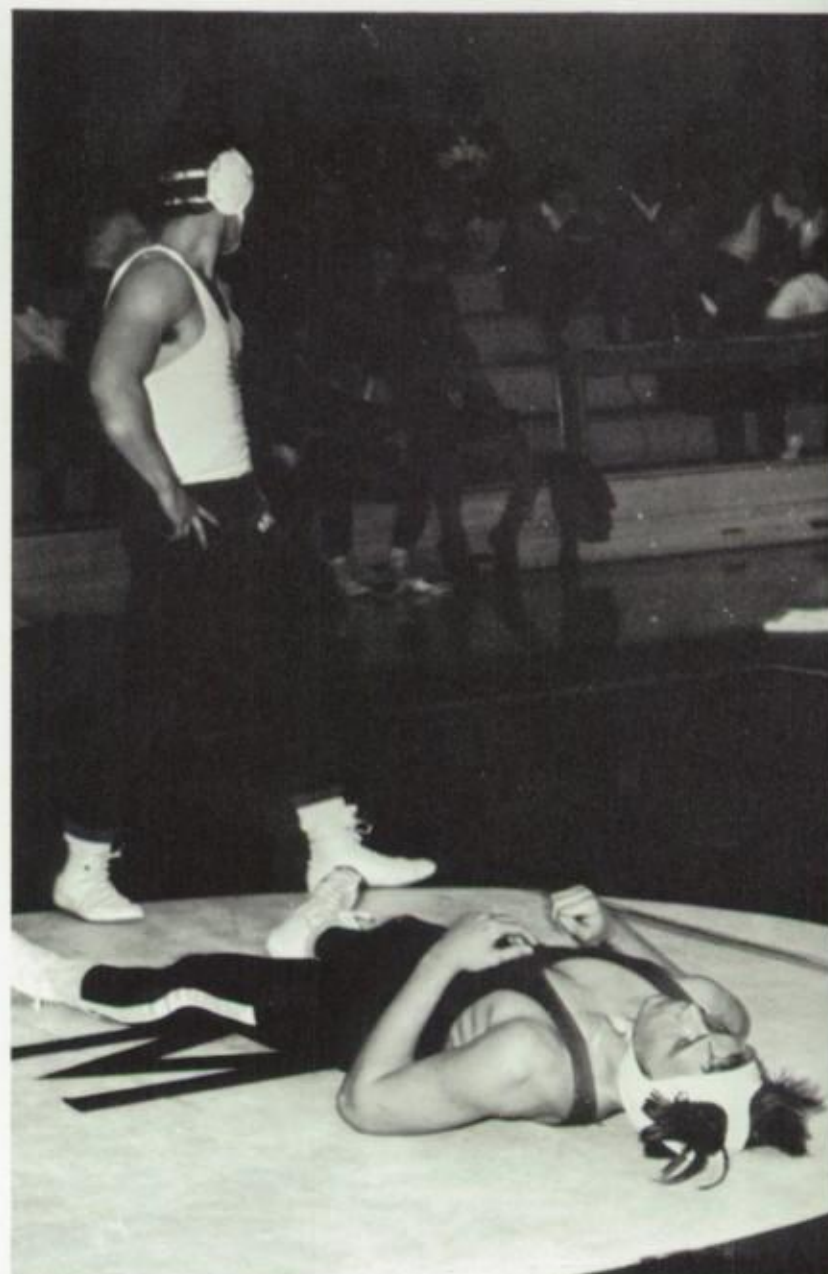

Although two consecutive losses to St. Pat's preceded the conference meet, the team entered it with an air of justified confidence. With the slightest tinge of luck Viator would capture the C.P.L. title, adding another trophy to the year's growing collection. No such luck, however. While the team finished a close second to the Shamrocks, three Lions emerged with individual championships: co-captains Mike Squires and Mike O'Malley, and Rick Komar.

Atlas Komar, flaunting his first year varsity status, went on to overpower three area opponents, taking first place in the Maine South Districts and eventually earning a trip to the state finals.

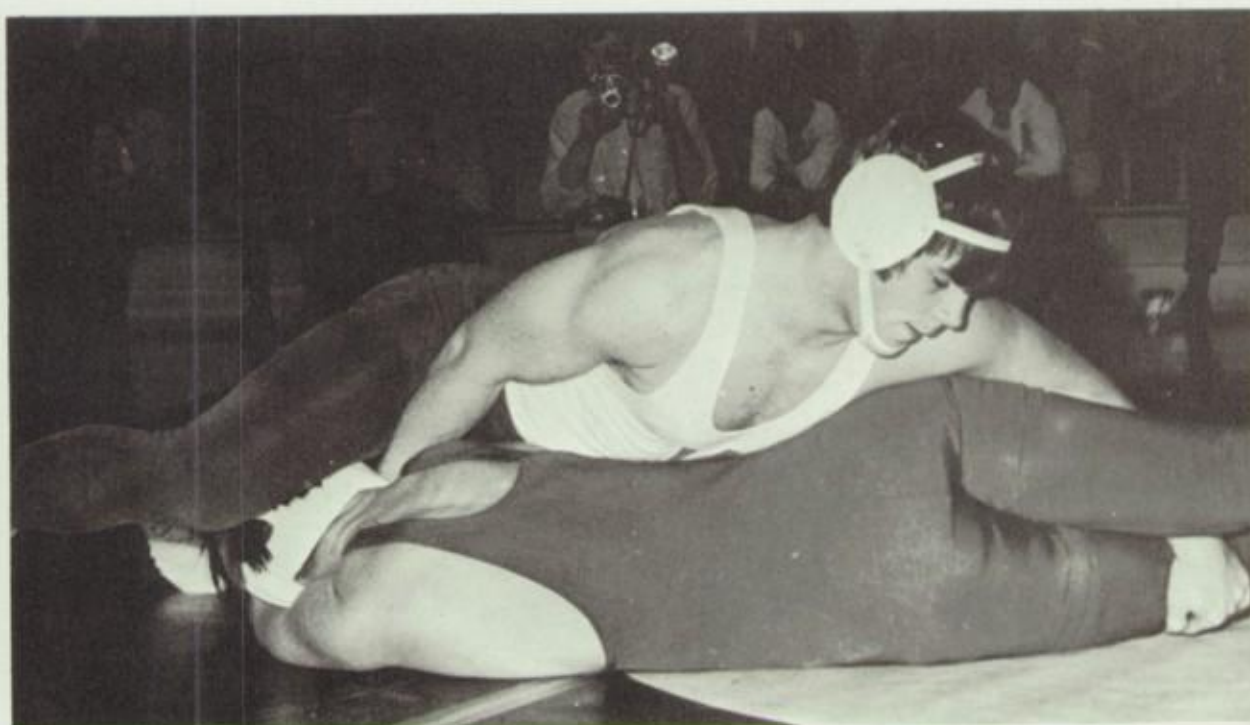

And though she speaks of no gold trophy and blaze-of-triumph sort of thing, such a year is a success in itself, for the '69-'70 season, more than any other, has polished, has perfected the talents of November, developed the muscular mass into the skilled Viator grappler.

A quick take-off by Mark Savage.

Great expectations dominated the thoughts of those eighty and some odd aquanauts (The Mond Machine, to be sure) who burrowed through the murky depths of the Saint Viator Natatorium.

Mr. Mond's usual conservative and cautious optimism accompanied a fresh, more exuberant feeling prompted by the thoughts of upcoming district and conference Meets — and tapering. "Under 50," the last relay, down state swims and such were figments of all but a few imaginations which eliminated much of the fatiguing routine of strokework, distance workouts, sprints and various other fun activities. All we need for the medley is a good breaststroker . . .

A new face brought with it a new outlook. Mr. William J. Cella, Jr. was on hand to put some zest into Campana, Harrison, Robertson and even Kinka. Oh sure, he was a coach, but he was also Chilly Billy. His presence initiated a fresh sort of team spirit.

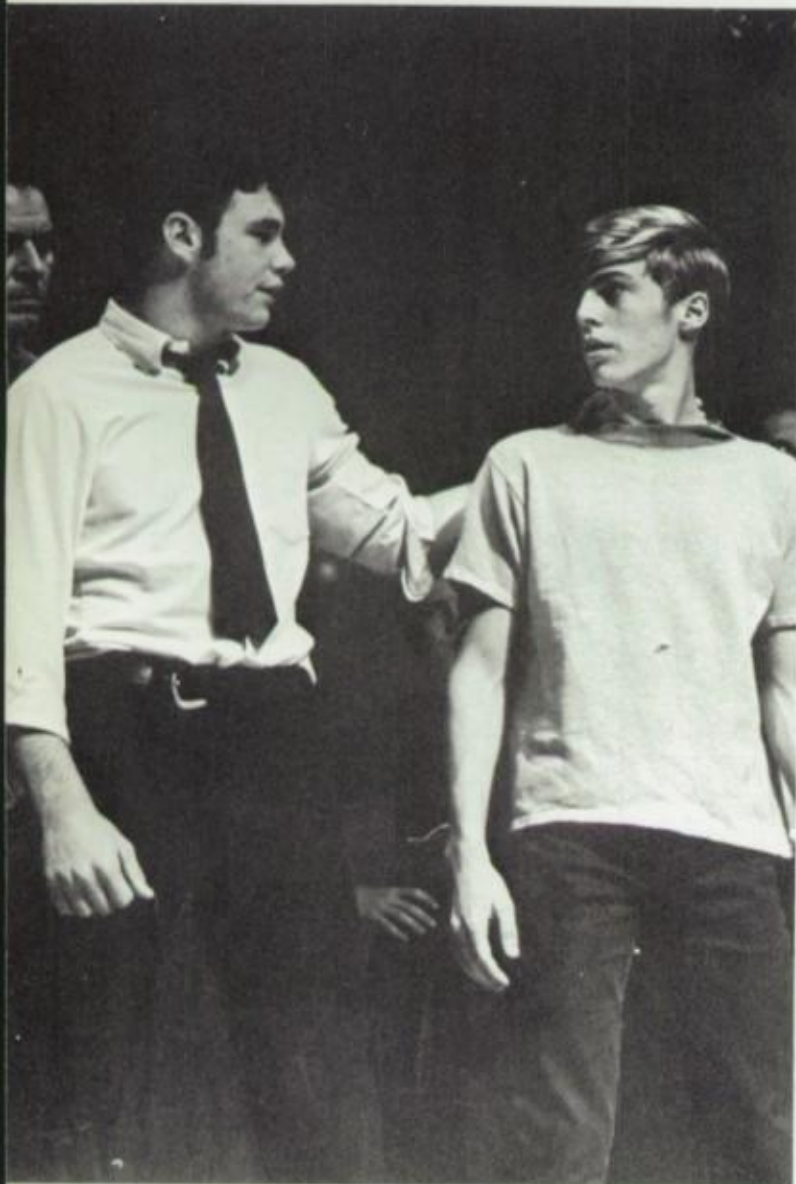

The Viator Relays were the manifestations of such spirit, records being crushed hither and thither. Hal got the hat; Lynch, Salerno, Gene-O, JC, Geiser and Stretch all received their helping of laurels. Dick Fitzsimmons even yawned — something must've been happening . . .

O'Hara's breath-taking stroke.

Co-captains O'Hara and Lynch accept 2nd place trophy at Titans.

The Titan Relays at Glenbrook South was the big meet of the swimming season before districts. The Sealions would face such perennial powers as New Trier West, Glenbrook North and the hosts. Though it had never finished higher than third, the Mond Machine entertained serious thoughts of victory. Peaked, psyched, rested — the Machine was ready to roll. Yet something seemed missing, out-of-place.

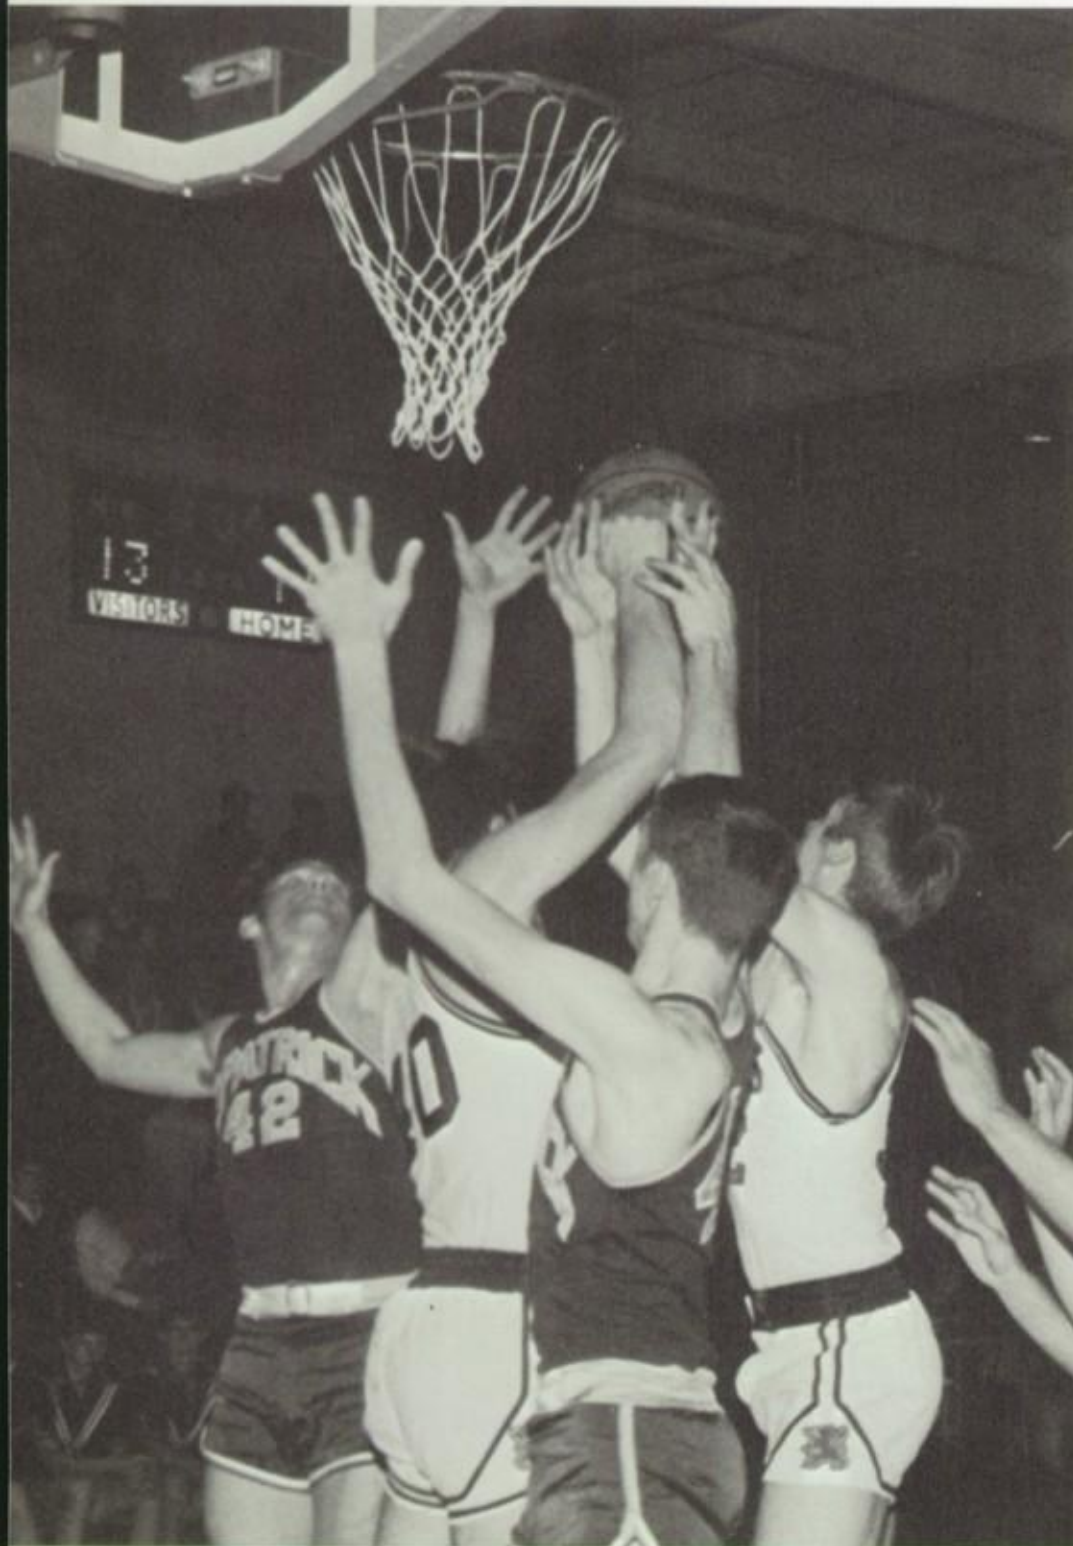

The first event was critical. Lavin, O'Hara, Lynch, and Salerno all did a fine job, but fell short. Harrison, Takata, Campana and Halas took another second. The Cowboys were just too much. When the team finally rid itself of the jitters and loosened up a bit, the New Trier Cowboys had built an insurmountable lead. A couple of 49's by Lynch provided an inspiration or two. There was still a chance to take second, but the last relay had to be won.

The Cowboys were always right there, confident. O'Hara went off, came in a little behind. Rich held the lead and won going away. Mond chuckled, satisfied. O'Hara and Lynch held the gold trophy, couldn't help but smile. Some cheerleader winked at Iversen . . .

And then came the district meet. Nine different colored tights and assorted "muscle-man" shirts (Marca Registrata). One hundred and some eight Goliath grapplers, twelve of them wearing a "V" on the front of their bulging T-shirts.

Enter the Man from Viator, striding out to the blood-stained mat, not altogether sure of his future status in the packed gymnasium, one of many located within the hostile confines of Maine South High School. (The classrooms, they say, are in the basement . . . )

Anyway, a ghost of a shiver runs down our Man's muscular spine, as a heavy bearded hulk dressed in bloody icky public school red ever-so-jauntily prances onto the field of combat. A slight breeze caused by the excited panting of the cheerleaders rustles the numerous newspaper clippings carefully pasted and clipped to his multiple biceps, triceps and latissimus dorsi.

This crimson Marvel casts a scornful sidelong glance at our Man. Our Man won't stand for that!!

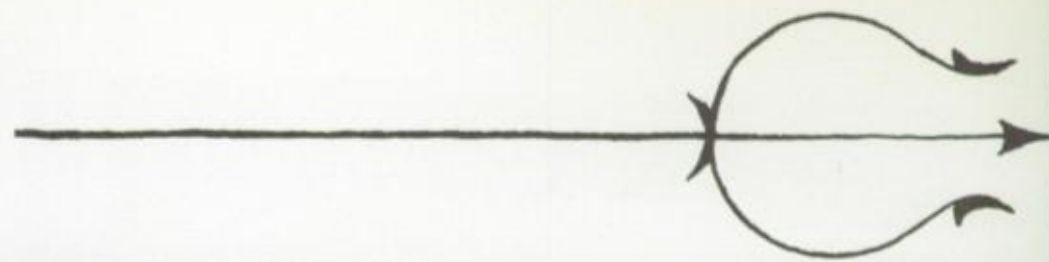

The match begins. Marvel feigns and feints, imagining himself toying with the shabbily dressed person from St. Vitor — that's the way they spell it in the programs. But the Man knows better. Deliberately he stalks his over-confident prey. And soon he has him pinned to the floor! The Marvel's look of astonishment (and other such forms of complete surprise) will forever be etched in the memories of all those who attended this memorable event.

It seemed the perfect ending for a better-than-perfect wrestling season.

For some teams a district meet means little more than a ritualistic qualification for a state meet. For Viator Sealions, it is an extrapolation of a season of unusually high peaks, in addition to a ticket downstate.

Yes, this is the meet, baby. Ego, months of coaching, workouts — all of it on the line. A little leg-shaving's worth the trouble . . .

Friday night proved herself worthy, Lynch placing himself first in the fifty and the hundred, Salerno proving himself in the fifty and the backstroke, Campana in the breaststroke. Yet the Boss seemed a bit disgruntled, viewing the action as a lack of teamwork, helped boost the morale with one of his renowned aphorisms. Lynch placed first and Salerno fifth in the fifty. And victors over Glenbrook South, we stole the third place spot.

At the state meet, Rich took the spotlight. Earning a third place title in the fifty and a fourth in the hundred, he went through his usual artful routine before a million or so spectators. After placing third in the fifty-yard free style, Mr. Lynch lost his lead to Lambert, Baird and Ferraro in the last few yards of the hundred-yard free.

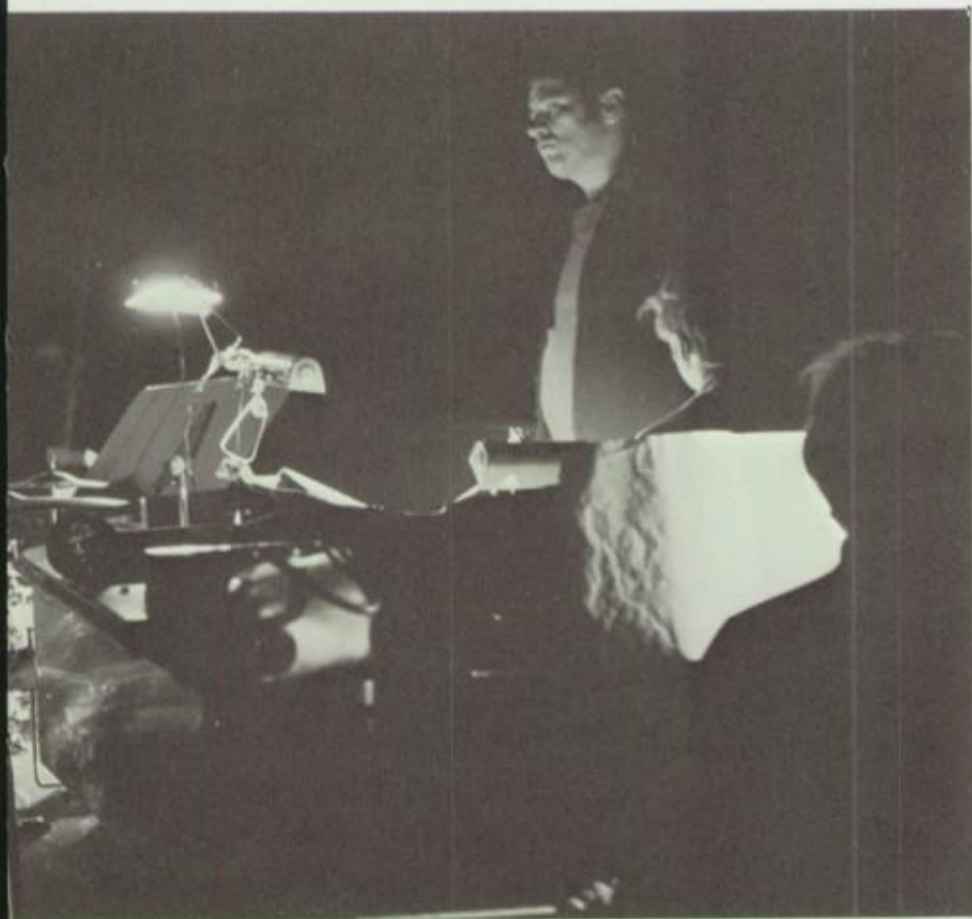

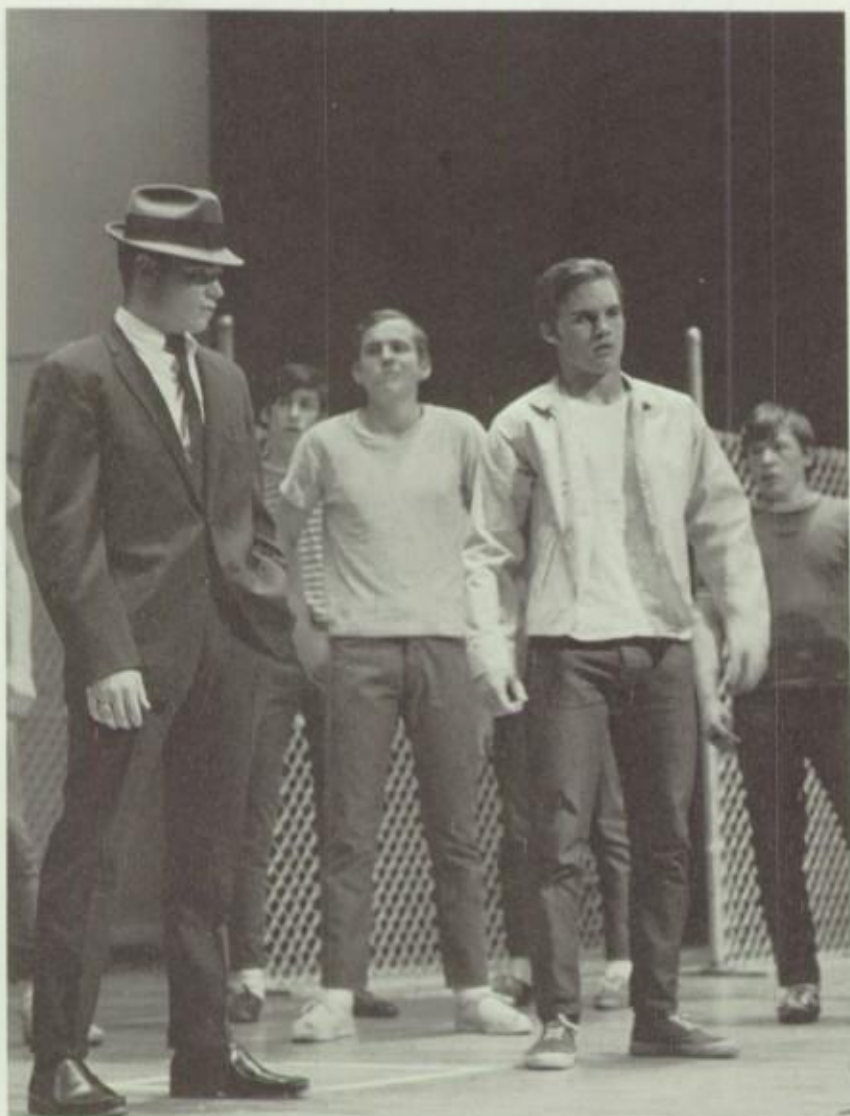

Undoubtedly one of the more polished athletes in the Mondial reign of St. Viator, artist Lynch gave a singular spectacular performance, a fitting end for a year hosting truly spectacular aquatic masters.

February Street-Fight

Today, all day I had a feeling a miracle would happen . . . , and it did. So long ago now, that far away miracle — a fleeting image of what was once our reality.

The image one sees is of people singing songs that are somehow their own, despite the hundreds of others that must have sung them before. It is of burning asphalt and shabby tenements; of exquisite joy, pointed, yet pointless hate, and unbearable anguish. Misunderstood kids and misunderstanding adults, they are part of this image, too, for they were we. It wasn't acting — how strange it was to watch another nature suddenly overtake a familiar face — a schizophrenic sort of thing.

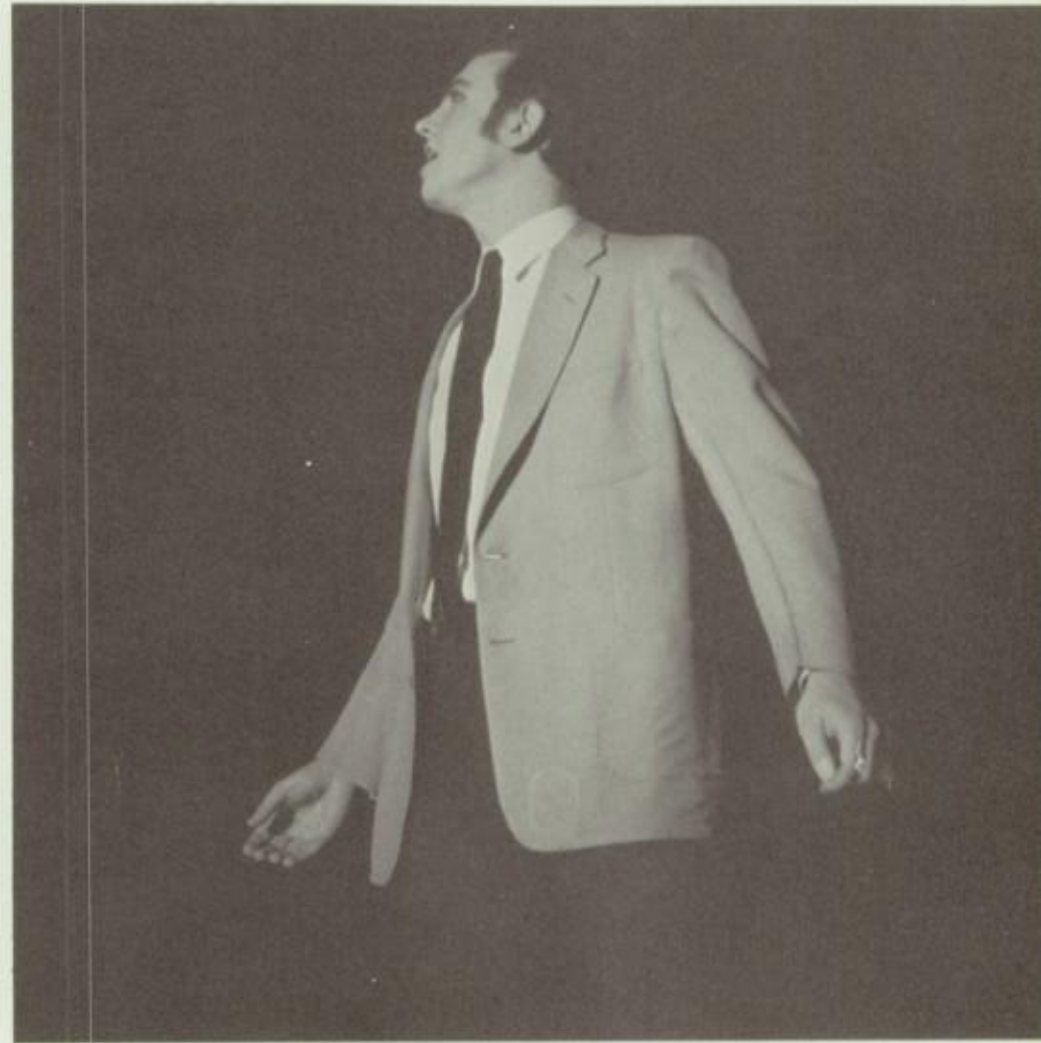

There is the almost innocent comradeship of the jets in The Jet Song; the high key taunting of The Prologue; the explosion of The Rumble. Spics, mics, wops, all are parts of this image, members of our by-gone play capsule. But now our creatures are gone, and they will never again be fully there — a part of ourselves, now gone, lingering in some forgotten drawerful of mementos, to be found accidentally someday in search of a pen. And then the image will return again, and we will think that perhaps it never really existed at all, merely a recurrence of some Trig class daydream. But then, it wasn't pretend, any of it, — it couldn't have been.

Tonight, Our Night

Te Adoro

Consider carefully this image; fondle it, cultivate it. Look long and hard at this image, retain all that you can, for soon the remembrance of that fleeting glimpse of squinting in the spotlights and seeing those eight hundred smiling, applauding nobodys, of switchblades and basketballs and too-dark makeup, of Doc's and Glad Hand and ten infinitesimally short performances; these will be all that's left.

Tonight, tonight . . ., it wasn't just any night, and we cherished every minute of it. Te Adoro y Gracias.

Homemade headbands — white shreds with blotches of red marker, thousands of white characters in a sea of navy blue sweatshirt, this denseness in the air, all of Fr. Marcotte's classes up for grabs — this heavy spirit, riot, a cheering in the air. Initial pep rally galvanizes the emotions; all reason decays. A moment of brouhaha in the midst of an otherwise sombre March.

Season for a spontaneous indecipherable burst of emotion, unleashed clamor in the middle of nowhere, spectacular, artful in its incongruity, jubilation bordering on insincerity.

And this feeling, formulation of an all-too-temporary web linking the some thousand components, fades and dissolves in a moment's time, after a few hours' worth of Arlington Stadium dueling. Dilates, droops, the bowl topples and spills. And though they might stay for ten or fifteen minutes afterward, singing, chanting proudly, tonight a former newness has wilted. All that remains is a week-long hoarseness . . .

Lord Giveth, Taketh Away

Comforters Tom Splitt, Bob Kowall, and Peter Breen rationalizes J.B.'s misery.

Setting: only a fortnight remaining when two personages decide that this specific piece de drame is not exactly their respective cups of tea, a show offering little recognition of the unquestioningly well-established title of "school star."

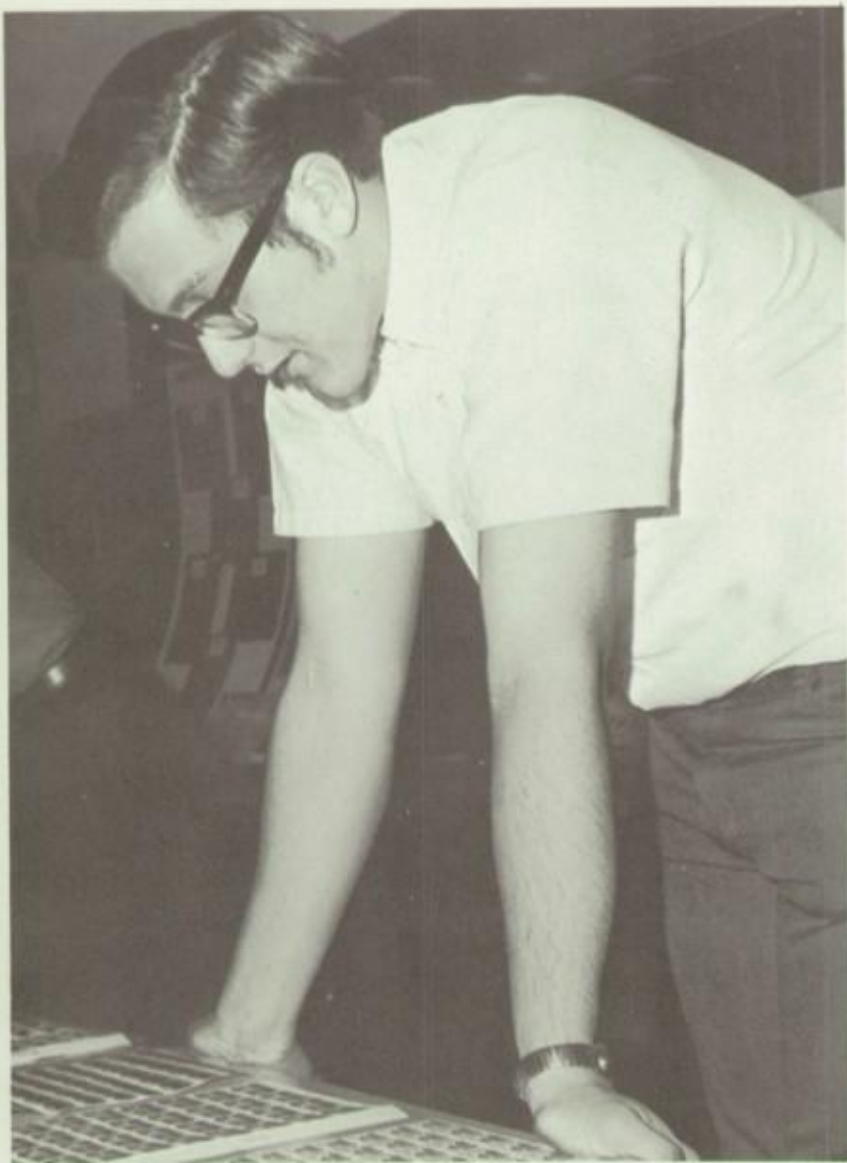

She was unlike all former, unlike lace niceties of song and dance, other such deus ex machina.

It was a series of playings, workings of supernatural wisps placing bets on the seemingly inevitable fate of man, acceptance of misery and pain as necessary threads in the tapestry of God's plans.

*he answers us like the stillness of a star that silences us asking we are — that's all our answer
we are — what we are can suffer
but what suffers, loves
for love is the ultimate force
a bronzen trophy
after the obstacle course giving meaning to it all the one and only last
the one and final impetus man's only answer*

Their annual gala exposition, held in B-133, was its usual smashingly successful self. It was there and only there that one might find those rarepreciousinvaluable specimens of philately, the toast of collectors the world over. And it was there and only there, at the 98th Annual Exposition of the St. Viator Philatelic Society, that one might find those rarepreciousinvaluable specimens of humankind who hoard those little shapes of paper, paste and FDR, rather than merely lick them and send them to their doom on some Boise-bound envelope. And I ask you, have you ever seen a stamp from Natal? Latvia?

Is AV a state of mind, a religious sect, or a special chemical ingredient in Fab or Crest? This, probably one of the most frequently asked questions of recent years, can best be answered with another question: What's for lunch, Tina?

As you probably already know, cinematography began back in 1944 when Reback Inc. needed something with which to record a nuclear holocaust. We've come a long way . . .

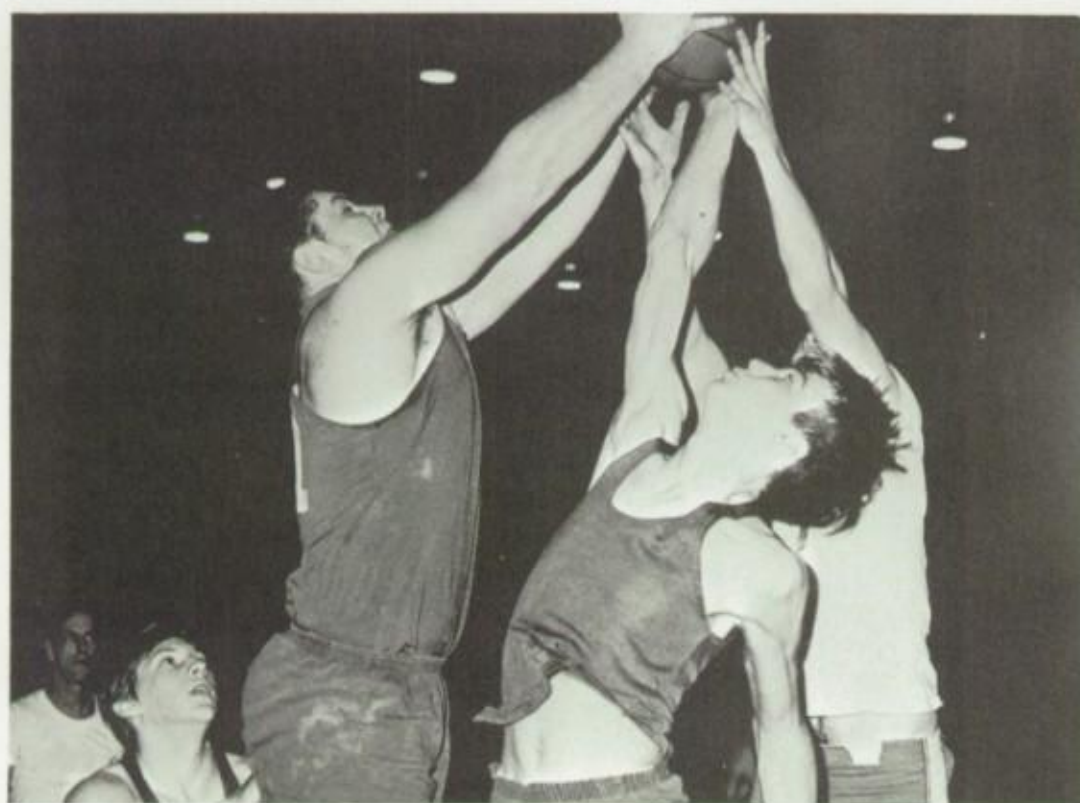

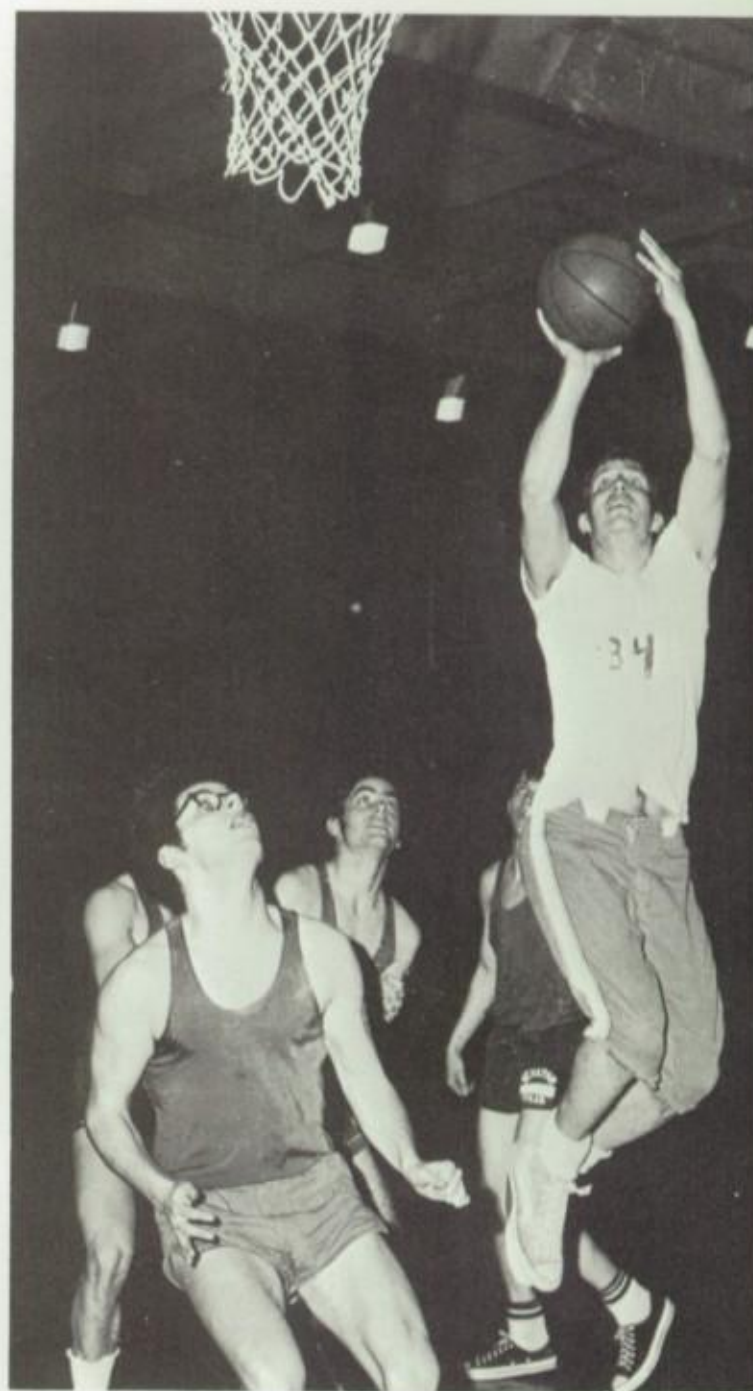

Yes, to be sure, James K. Nelson, Jr. and his crew of crafty androids have been of great service to Viator. Jim explained his system to us: When we have to deliver projectors in the morning, Dennis Felke here gets the electric cattle prod and I pin a little note stating the equipment's destination to the shirt of one of the androids. Between the two of us, we can usually get things straight. The pragmatism of such a process might be disputed; nevertheless, they make a great team. Humanities class would seem hollow without forty thousand shouts of Nelson! and Focus! directed at the projection booth.

At last someone had devised a means through which the rebellious, defiant, but inexperienced representatives of the Now Generation could come face to face on the field of battle with the authoritarian oldsters commonly referred to as the Establishment. That was years ago.

Yeh, but just wait 'till next year, then we'll REALLY show 'em.

Finally, after years of trial and error, a group of inspired, hardworking members of the class of '70 dealt an obviously inferior faculty squad a decisive defeat. Despite the rebounding of Mr. Klaus and the long-range bombing of Fr. Marcotte, the faculty team was unable to cope with the unquestionable prowess of Brillo, Wetz, Dubs, and OZ, as the seniors tallied an amazing 801-9 victory over the faculty. Revenge was sweet.

According to certain prognostic passages of the Apocalypse and Poor Richard's Almanack, 1970 is to be a year of good harvest for the Viator Lion Nine. And considering the fact that they did indeed win a CPL co-championship, lending some breathing room to age-old nemesis Marist, the aforementioned prophecies might be considered adequately fulfilled. It seemed, however, an almost accidental accomplishment — their usurpation of the throne seems a by-product of the season's labours.

It was the one and only district game which might be considered the bitter portion of an otherwise exquisite meal. In their usual stealthy manner, the districts crept upon us. Anticipation and excitement reaching apex, all flash before our eyes in one thrusting disappointing instant. It has almost become ritual, this hallowed blurred phase of our annual respectable baseball season, but even this expected incident seemed incongruous, anachronistic this year.

Perhaps the laughter, the fun that involuntarily arises when nineteen juniors and seniors work with the joking-ranting-screaming-dedicated oversize leader-leprechaun may have obstructed the path to the ultimate of potency, the most extensive sort of success. Perhaps this team had something more than the usual character found in a band of gents grouped together by the common cause of athletic competition. Just perhaps.

Alps in the West Wing

It is early some activity period morning, and there is a scent of made-in-a-French-cellar stale cheese lingering in the west wing. And upon my entrance into the famed segment of the building proper, I can begin to hear murmurings, pieces of some reminiscings about last year's trip to Boise. And as I enter the posterplastered room, the boards white with stiff chalk characters, I am confronted with the briskness of the open-window Alpish room early-morning cold.

Later that same year bread is broken in the Humanities office and the Fondue Fling becomes a reality. Sir, how do you say 'platypus' in French? Lots more flicks of Boise, Boise stories. Ah yes, gents, remember Boise? But little did we realize the club's destiny, that of collapse, of void. Yes indeed, we did have the Fondue Feast, but soon after, the Cercle Francais folded. Lifeless, silence.

Urgent Whim

Indeed the first time that students as a mass had begun to think about the goals of an educational institution. Began as tieless card-marked aggravated attitude toward the administrative decision not to offer future contracts to a few certain teachers. Concern. But blind emotion-blurred concern. Short series of go-into-first-period emergency student council meetings. A packed B-139, discussion-thriving. Social studies class: an attack of the topic. Awareness of the undissolving link between the disciplinary and the educational. Motivation. Relevancy. Technique. System. Memorization. First great dive into utopian educational and behavioral patterns and systems. All digging at the roots of the Viator Man. A worthwhile excavation.

Mon Ami, Do You Wish to Race With Me?

MVP Steve Schlickman runs qualifying time for state finals.

.500. Hardly what one would call a season, at first glance. But consider, for a moment, all that is involved. Unlike other high schools in the area, we have no indoor track. Unlike other grade schools in the area, we haven't got an outdoor track. Estimates made early in the season by a Gallup-Harris representative found that the number of students here who do not even know that St. Viator has a track team is somewhere between 50 and 75% of the entire student body. Our regular season opponents include some of the toughest teams in the state. In other words, to those who were associated with the track team early in the season, a fifty percent meet record for the season never for a moment seemed short of our potential (shall we go now and play our violins together?).

From the start, the problem with the track team, not unlike that of Mr. Mondy's tankers, was a lack of depth. Despite the excellent performers in a few of the major events, the team fell far behind in providing good back-up runners capable of taking the seconds and thirds necessary.

Yet, this is not to say that the entire season was void of any and all bright spots. Many long-standing school records were shattered, including a mile relay record which was broken four times, and a few underclassmen turned in surprisingly sparkling performances on the varsity level. Among the top performers were senior Mike Lins, and juniors Tom McNamara, Jerry Richardson, Mark Franzen, and Most Valuable Player, Steve Schlickman, who, after a record breaking showing in the District meet, went downstate to take a tenth place showing in the half-mile event. And as for the below-.500 season record, pardonnez-nous.

Strummantics/Pedantics

I was just nearing the Religion Dept. Office when I first heard it — what I thought to be the screechings of macaws and toucans, or something equally jungly, being emitted from the chapel sanctum. Curious sprite that I am, I very slowly opened the weighted pseudo-walnut doors and found myself on the shores of Lake Champlain. In the center of the setting were black-robed satanic-looking people in long flowing grey beards, some holding ornate brass scepters, others strumming Eko twelve-string guitars. And all about them, in a colour-blazing spinning backdrop could be seen huge tribes of Burmese maidens swaying to olde Bing Crosby records, hundred-foot cans of Jewel Maid cleanser, a fiery Thursday sunset, a large alabaster mosaic facade of an Italian Rococo cathedral, an English WWII squadron in dress colours, two billion flaming giraffes pole-vaulting over a phlegathontal river. The music swirling about me was a mixture of Bach's Fourth Symphony in C Minor and Hey Jude. I only escaped the horrid montage after purchasing two metric tons of John Thome albums and a dozen tickets to The Den of Infinity . . .

Someday I think I'll be a teacher. Wear a funny hairstyle and a mustache. Put funny things all around my desk. But my style won't be funny, no. For it is only when the values of the teacher or the institution as a whole change that a classroom, a class or a society can undergo a moulting of values, metamorphosis of ethos. There is a need for the pioneer component, the first few sparks. There is a need to mature one's philosophy, discuss with others, learn of the little help there is to achieve the goal. The open society is a long-term result of the open classroom.

That's very nice, gentlemen, but the team with the lowest score wins . . .

Fr. Durkin has helped nurture St. Viator from the once-tiny proverbial acorn to the present proverbial mighty oak, by implementing his many diverse talents. Among them: his ability to lecture on the relevance of ribosomes to the space age society as well as his proven artful leadership of the golf squad. Yes, much like Cadillac and Zenith, excellence has been the trademark of his product. Now the cumulative record of the pro linkers stands temporarily frozen at the amazing combination of 78-17, the figures soon to rise once again on the leftmost portion. For this year's fulfillment of another segment of what seems to be destiny by no means marks the fall of the Durkin dynasty.

The gentlemen of the varsity polished themselves a typically 1970 masterpiece with their 13-0 record and with their CPL championship, a by-product to be sure. Standouts included that Machievelli of the sports world, Mario Vitale, who earned Medalist honors with a one-under-par seventy in the league meet, and Joe Dougherty, world-renown for his flashy sportswear, competing with George Hamilton and Prince Charles. Looks like there's a real tradition going with juniors McDonald, Locasio, Fenton, Evans and soph Jerry McDonald all earning early spotlights. The setting of a team record with a phenomenal 142 should quell all doubt that these people are excellent individual performers, excellent teammates. The quality goes in before the name goes on . . .

Identity Fusion

Here is a night when all is subordination to the two halves, those two people that can sometimes too-seldom become Self. More than ever, for anything else that takes up your time, your thoughts; there should only be room for the two smiling parts of you.

A cold windy damp night. It seemed ironic, impossible that inside, where it was nearly as dark, it would be warm. The lights were spraying that fountain which stood toward the middle of the montage. The spectacle was not us; it revolved, instead, around us.

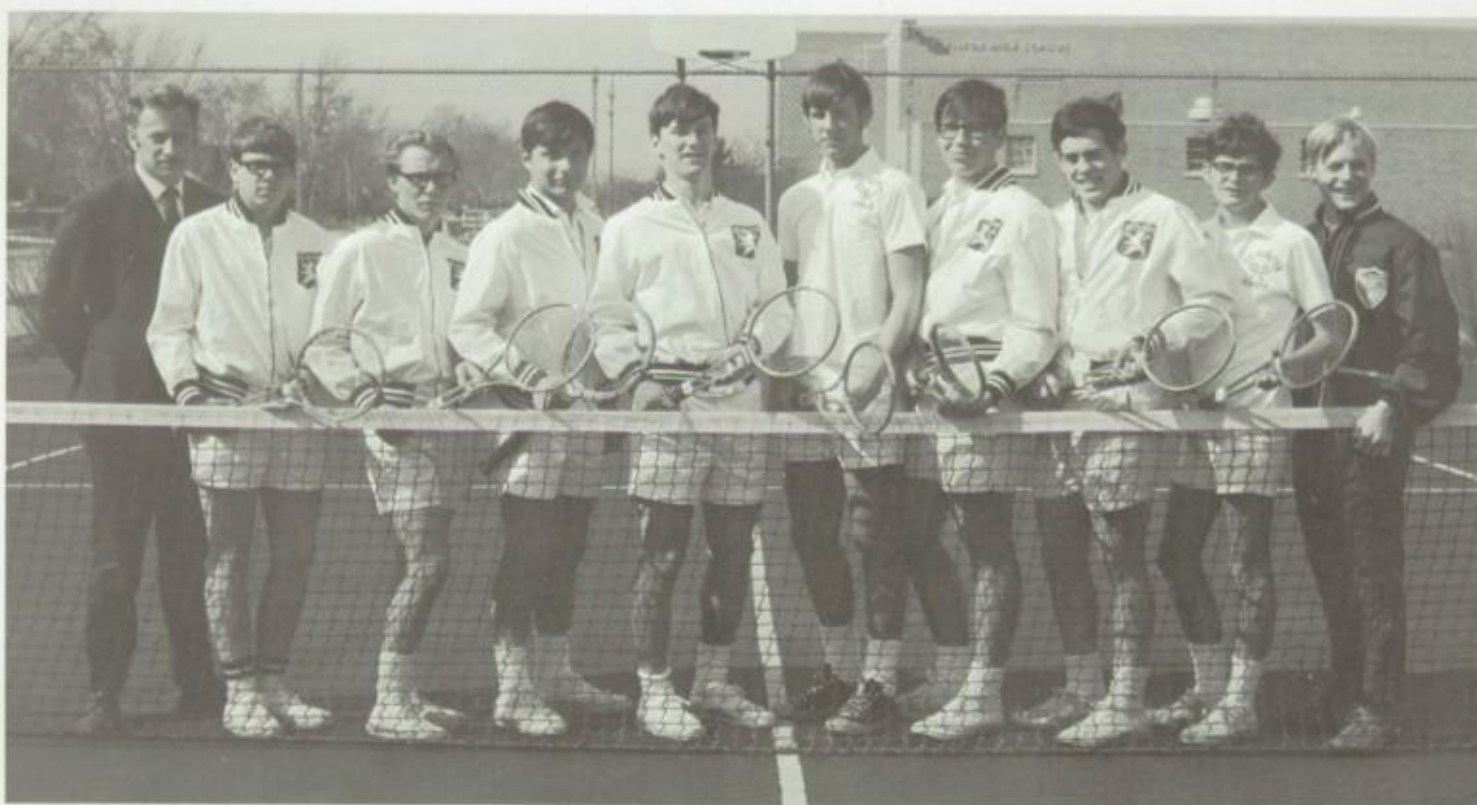

How strange to feel a bit of someone else. Similes are drawn constantly, spread and scatter, landing intermittently — other personalities integrated with our own, revealed oftentimes. Girls become gracefully ladies, casualness is neatly hidden (almost), tucked under a tuxedo. But I saw her just . . . yesterday. Carrying the punch even looked easy, learned it on The Rogues I think. Some new rings were present, some not on the hands of the original possessors. Some were traded for. Like father, like son.

The petals, the scent of flower was present, trailing their memories close behind — delicate triggers to a now unfolding past, past embodied in a night, in you. Here is a night of wraiths given form. It was the one night that could be caught and held. By both of us. By both of me.

Well, the Knights of the Royal Order of the Nette almost did it again — unseat perennial league champion St. Ignatius, that is. After last year's co-championship, the Racketeers had hopes for an undisputed title this year. No such luck: their championship bid fell a bit short. They had the misfortune of losing the conference match 12-10, only three sets making the distinction between victor and conquered. The doubles combo of Dan'l Kivlahan and Bill Hitzeman took the CPL crown for doubles, and senior Jim Dalton proved himself a standout for the Rutschi gang, capturing a third-place finish in the league tournament. Gary Aldrich, sophomore star, showed the tennis-viewing populace the promise of future quality by his performances. Well, the tennis team almost did it again; the tennis team did it again.

It was quite commendable and honourable of Br. Lentz to let the men o' the podium take complete control of the club, thereby making the organization something they might call completely theirs. The club participated in a surprisingly few number of tournaments.

But when in action, the varsity team — Scholar Lilly, Quik-Recall Quinn, Golden Voice Goulet and Devastating Danna — put on quite a show, did quite a bit of work on their own.

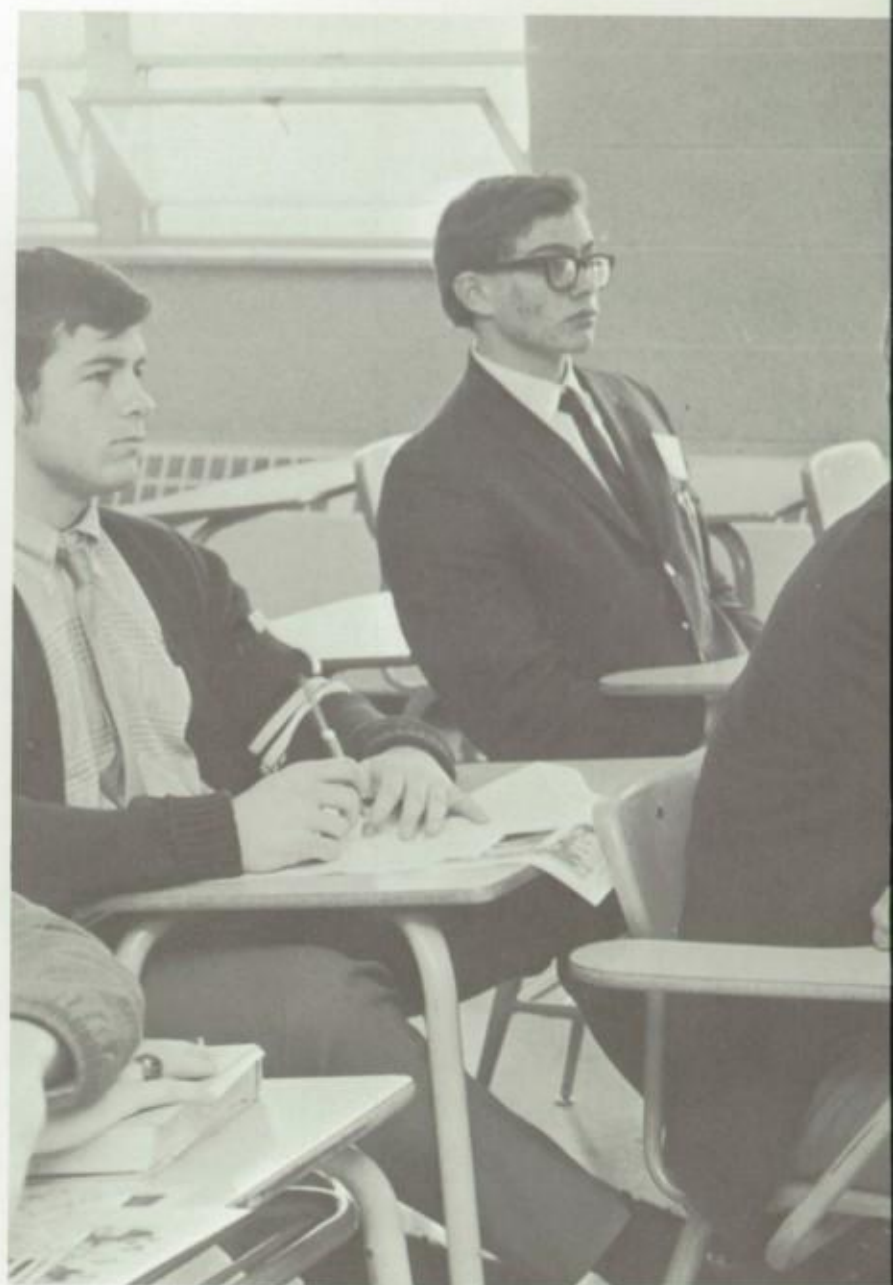

We've undergone metamorphosis, reached what might be called the end of the Golden Age of Debate at Viator. For with the passing of these orators, last remnants of the Cagney-Smeddinghoff-Sullivan-Schooley Era, where will we be, Mr. Given?

How I'd like to cave myself in
Just for a fiscal week or two
Find some little levee off the Gulf
Crystal silver splashings

Limbed menthol acreage
Resting awhile near some lighthouse mind
Goes hurling
Beaming through dark Southern sky
It's way down on the map
Where the brown 'n' greys and double lines
The little printed Enco signs
And all the turnpike numbers
Turn to big green squares

Say there, Phil, do you know where the lecture on "The Ethics of Metaphysical Research in a Sewage-Oriented Society" is being given? Oh you know, the one that's being given by the representative from Universal Big Bad Polluters Ltd.

Quietly, relevantly, Earth Day crept upon us, bringing with it a new awareness of our environment, facts and figures concerning who did what to the airwaterland that surrounds us, and a whole day of no regular classes. Population control, water pollution control, auto emissions, sewage treatment — these and dozens of other pertinent topics were flashed before our pliable minds semi-didactically. A veritable wonderland of distinguished bombastic orators from pollution control committees and defensive jittery representatives from villainous complexes. Now REALLY, boys, you can't realistically expect to have fish living in EVERY stream, can you?

But we did learn something, and in a different fashion from the usual. It was an adventure, to be sure. We did benefit from the mile-long list of seminars available to anyone and everyone who wanted to learn about the IZAACK Walton League or The Myth of Food from the Sea. Thanks to Andy, Lionel, Dave, Jeff, Marty & Marty, and good ol' Fr. Vector, we now know: cigarettes kill, sulphur dioxide kills, carbon monoxide kills, phosphates kill, algae kills, sewage kills, speed kills, third children kill, ghetto life kills, atomic radiation kills, etc. Now we are all aware. Now we know all about pollution, environment, ecotactics and the like. Now we actually give some thought to the throwing of our garbage all over the halls and floors before we do it.

For the third straight year the men of the diamond have cashed in on a share of the CPL title, finishing the season with the extremely respectable 15-6 record. Experienced ball club, yeh. Impressive victories became registered over area rivals Forest View and Prospect and even state-ranked Lane Tech, supplementing those astonishing scores of 22, 17, and 14 which seemed to highlight the exciting and artful, sometimes-inconsistent season.

Poor Richard and his fellow augurers proved themselves reliable once again: another seasonal masterpiece.

At the Marquis'

It was as if the Marquis d'Invernesse suddenly decided to hold a more grandiose rendition of the Semi-Annual Regional Evening Autumn Ball, one of those parties where everyone would come scrubbed and puffed and frilled and pre-laced and holding La Palinas and Bloody Marys, everyone dressed as a lord or debutante.

Yes, well I'm sorry, son, but we ran out of the black Edwardians; you got your second choice: the brick-red jumper . . .

It was Archduke Michlaus III and Marina Kane Antoinette sipping cognac out of large blue-tinted ornately-emblemmed globesque glasses, lying on a huge fleecy polar bear rug before some flagstone fireplace alive with crackling Winter spirits, all snug in their pinkish quartz chateau outside Aix-En-Provence.

It was cummerbund tightening and fourteen thousand photos for the album. Yes, but THIS time put your arm around her . . .

It was a small treasury of gift-wrapped Panasonic radios and the McGovern table which put them through a quick endurance test. It was the suave subdued-effervescence of Gingissisque Tom Dubay saying those prommish things in those tenor tones. It was punch and socializing and theatre-priced Cokes and those fluffy pastel dogs with typically stupid fluffy pastel-dog facial expressions.

But unlike the Greek stage, none of the personages changed with an occasional change of masque. For if there were to be a night designed for an unnatural breed of sincerity, this would be it. Alteration foments stereotype and such change smothers impulse, stifles spontaneity. You see, there existed a certain levity, unique frivolous freedom to run up to the fifth floor and unscrew all the hall lamps. For it is exactly that — preconception and formulated mood — which stifles uniqueness.

From King Bill Madden with Queen Chris Maine.

It was Larry Quinnett's début as Mick Jagger. It was that welcome occasion for the dottering of Messrs. Brady & Sweeney's respective havanas. Yes, it was unique.

And now I ask you in less sombre tones . . . when does the prom end and the post-prom begin? Would you have been shattered if suddenly midway through it all, the theme had been changed to Stardust?

Oh well, on to the Keyes and then to the Dunes . . .

Love & Un(ions)

President-elect John Moran of the Union ticket during debate.

Candidates John Repede and Bill Hake of the Un ticket.

It seems that Executive Board elections have become much less sensational in appearance around here. Quite conspicuous in their absence were green and hot pink ratewithray buttons, professional-type printed posters, and corridors splashed and dripped with indecipherable spray paint length-of hallway slogans. Candidates have either taken on an air of sobriety or have simply become disenchanted with baby-kissing and flag-waving.

There were four tickets, you see. Moran preached Cellan Diplomacy and tactful attack. Repede offered re-structuring, enlargement of scope. O'Brien proposed true dedication and work through the existent committee system. McCall tried to be serious.

An effect of student-faculty policy/philosophy clashes was the outstanding emphasis on a proper formulation of a student school policy at the auditorium debates. And also noteworthy was the Repede vs. Moran / Survival-of-the-Fittest-Lesser-of-Two-Evils argument.

And in addition to the regular appealing, abdicating, arguing, complaining; there was demagoguing and philosophizing this year.

Election became Primary Election as Un and Union fell short of the required majority vote. But after a trifle more campaigning, John Moran and his small band of future valedictorians emerged as next year's band of diplomatic (time will tell . . . ) leaders.

All the ideology fermentation and polishing and all the personal excitement of involvement and school spotlight, like any year, seems to die at the tabulation of the votes. Pity.

Someday we will leave here. Viator is simply one member of a large chain, one of a series of developmental life-settings that formulate the individual, polishing and touching-up, modifying some personality core through a finite time period. But our stay is fixed, bounded; we leave. Soon we are on to new sunsets, fogged horizons; to a fulfillment of a thousand varied future aspirations, off to newer experience. All assumption.

It never struck me as anything too bizarre; 'twas simply routine — the bell ending second period. Another of these periodic opportunities to strut in a usually phlegmatic fashion from the depths of Fr. Vector's to the locker down the hall (where I met Phil and Steve) on to F-101, Italian spaghetti, buttered veg., &c. And as the bell rang, several of the classroom doors began to close in a pattern, all anticipating usual corridor disturbances. The room just to the left was Mr. Roelle's nook, ringing with logs and sines and determinants and such; the room to the right was packed with sophomores, a few volunteers at the front board dissecting octagons and three-dimensional cycloids. The room was there, just as any other room — nothing too special. Students would shift from year to year, up a notch on the ladder, as students had done before, experiencing the same setting in the same fashion. And in some moment or moment-eon, I too would be leaving this set of unchanging circumstances, as others had done. Only I am involved in this system of dynamism; all setting is constant.

... and then some kid came up and said Mr. Schwind was ... dead.

Swollen Hands and Swelling Egos

Large grey-and-green marble and mahogany ionic-pillar table before you, stacked with small square funny blue folders and pins in plastic boxes filled with foam. Initial wanderings and greetings, buzzings all about you, the occasional but periodic outburst of laughter from the platinum blonde pregnant woman in the leopard-skin coat at the corner table. And everyone, small collection of faces seen every day in Trig or Bio, is scrubbed and haircutted, collar-tie-coated, each at his respective table intimating with cohorts.

And front center stage is the throne of an immense chrome microphone, its Shure Unidyne head cocked back snubbingly at the seated High Priest and Court. Then suddenly, just as the busboy retrieves my unfinished plate sprayed with hashbrown and beef fragment, the conversation begins to fade.

... again like to welcome you to the Kth Annual Awards Banquet of Saint Viator. This evening is one allotted to the recognition of exceptional individual academic achievement and extra-curricular activity ...

Swollen hands through B-Honor clappings, a talk by one of the more illustrious of the clan, and the spotlighting of Messrs. Beltran and McDonough by the Senior Class Gift of 1970. And in the under-construction depths of the good ol' Sheraton-O'Hare, a moment of tenseness followed by the march of an overwhelmed Mr. Tom Du-bay over the vast red carpet plains to the Mother of all Ornate Silver Trophies, the Erdmann Cup. Smile, choke, blush, thanks — stay a while and absorb a deserving applause.

Consummatum Est.

It is some late May morning and a blue/chrome Detroit or two slides herself into some yellow-paint corral, spilling her flesh-form contents onto the asphalt. And selecting and securing the more scholarly texts from scattered positions on the front-seat vinyl, I slowly approach a six-door facade — then suddenly stop, as if awakened. For I find myself completely alone, a mere spot in the three-sided gargantuan brick well of the Visitors' Parking Lot, prey to strange reflections and sudden awarenesses.

For I discover all about me this air of uncanny freshness, blue halcyon Spring breeze whisperings framing some low-pitched dignifiedly sober early-morning classroom PA reverberations leaking from the line of rooms before me, above me. And will the second, fifth, and sixths of Mr. Fox and Fr. Schramko please meet on Different Shore B-214 today?

It's 9:00 some late May Friday morning and I wander through the empty halls tripping over shreds of fallen poster, strands of drooping sagging blue crepe paper. Even the queen, Mrs. Flynn is tired. And I pass the auditorium of raffle rejects half-listening semi-intently to some film on athletic hygiene, a car crash or two, The Fixer, whatever . . .

Library doors are closed. And in the infamous Red Lion Room, fallen alphabet blocks, pieces of some cardboard holiday, torn tablecloths greet me as I enter. A sick-looking Charlie Brown collapses, folding at my feet. Tape-spotted walls. I go wading through the debris; I begin to gather the fallen candles. Some have burned out.

Where have you gone, Days of Roy Burchill?

Fallen days, fallen minutes — where have you all gone?

It seems like there are miles upon miles of this glaring plasterboard — like a kitchenette or the lining of a tissue box. And in this cell we plot, collecting, we saturate our sponge-minds with relics, scraps of time and place that bid the mind recall. We run around with clipboards on the chosen days, screaming over loudspeakers and sit and peck for hours upon hours — a day or two before the deadlines. We make funny charts and play with plastic tools and sonic blasters, run off' useless forms and go skiing constantly, go far away to discharge car batteries and postpone subscription deadlines. Strange lot are we who compile Viatomes — tomicographers they call us.

The Last Hurrah

Gone by so quickly, this first episode.

A thinnish wide-eyed type of woman
 Stands stiffly on the platform, smiling with effort,
 The ends of her mouth,
 The corners of her mouth twitch furiously,
 Spasmodically.
 Oh, she is one of several, I'm sure,
 Who have come to see me leave, mouth others' good-byes,
 Yet all their squares of sobbed linen,
 All the wagging bobbing wrists, flashing specks of flesh,
 Create a mere pattern about her.
 There are strange deep lines about her eyes,
 Grooves and ridges dividing her forehead,
 Things which only of late have begun to form,
 Strange things I only notice now.

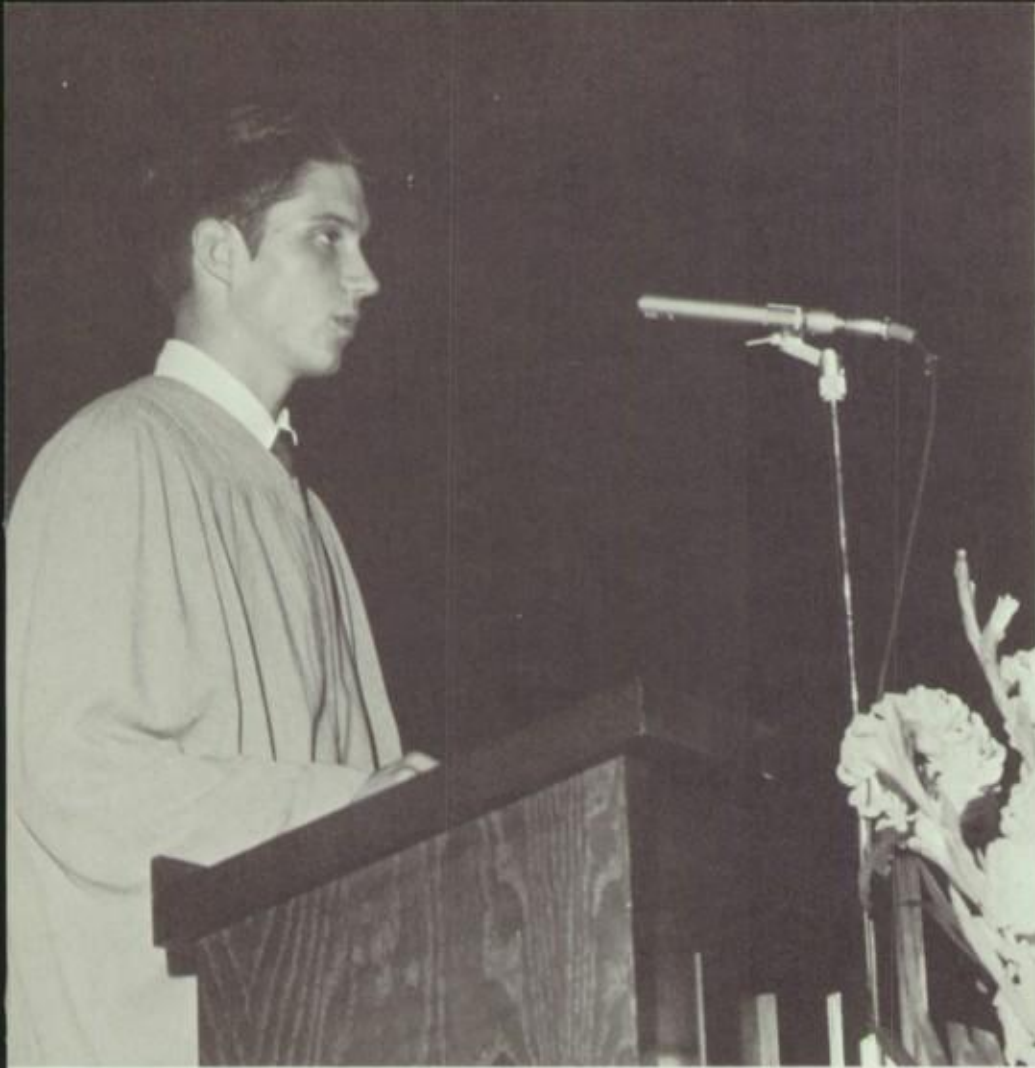

I'm to be off in a moment or two, dear life,
 Dragged to some other station, some portal.
 I fear the approach. There will I lie
 Only to review all that I have learned here with you,
 Only to relay the foundations of my empire.
 Yet the prospect of wiping my slate clean,
 Of filling in those few and certain gaps with putty —
 Those tiny gaps I overlooked before —
 Of touching frontier, unexperienced and virgin —
 Such prospects always incite me, excite me.
 This time I know where to build new fires.
 This time shall I seek out those celestial beauties
 As I remount the summit.

BELOW: Salutatorian Terry Cullen delivers four-year memoir at breakfast.

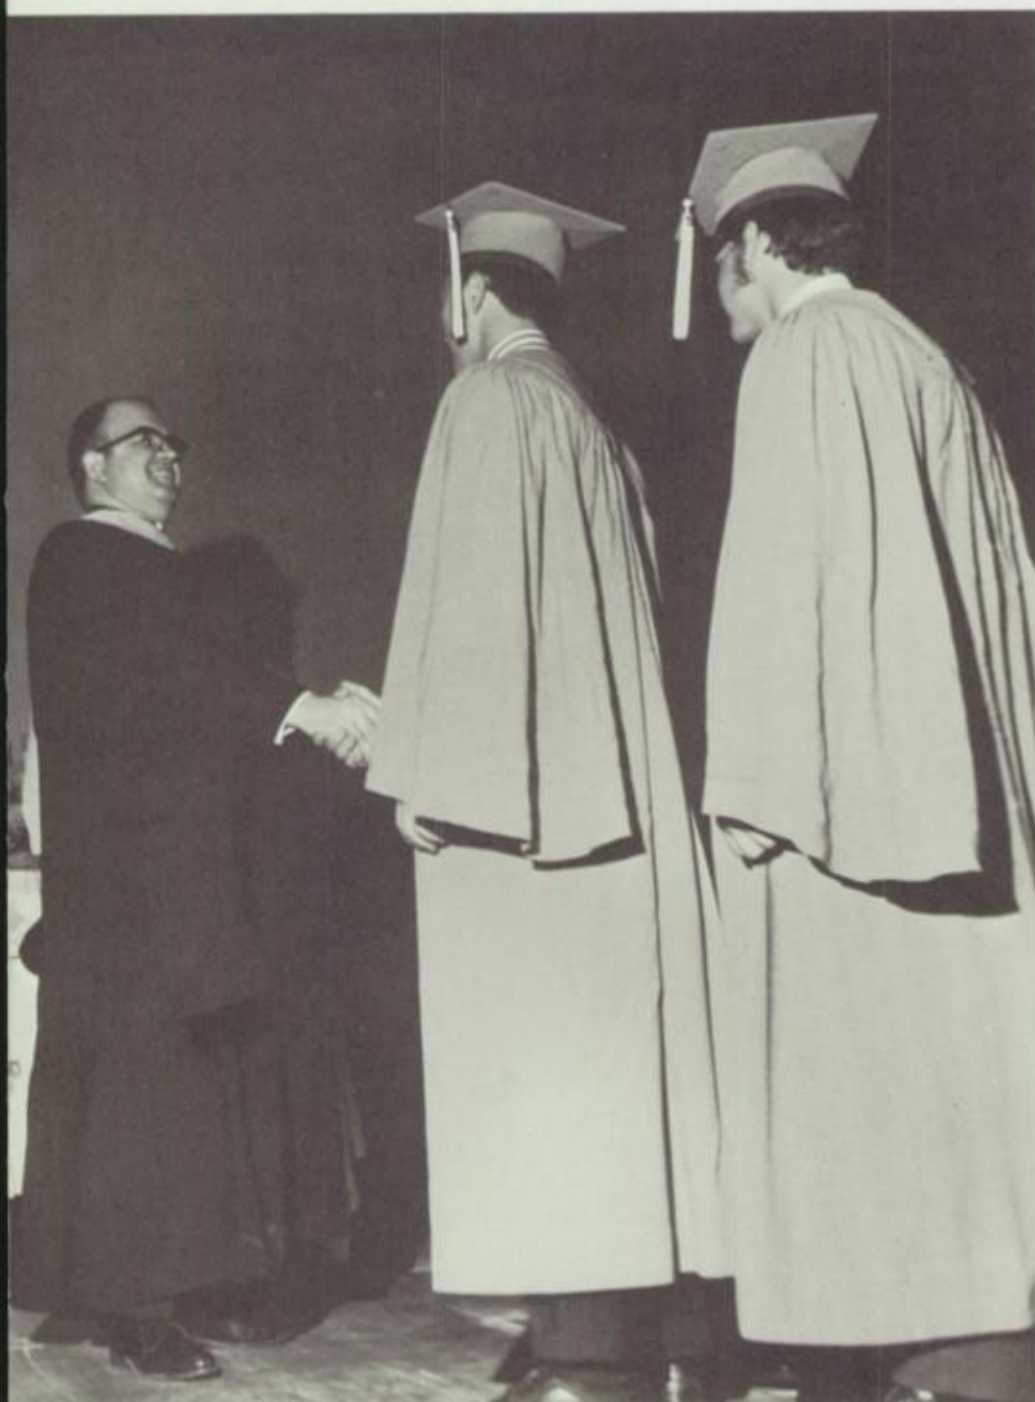

Class Valedictorian Gary Wenzel addresses fellow graduates at ceremony.

But note, dear life, that there are those Which simply because they were first, fresh, primary
Can never be done quite thusly again;
Though I may try to relive, I'll find former freshness gone.
And only at times will things seem to relate
To you back here, back then.
All are irrevocable, all moments so precious
Even precious in the pain they caused, lost unto the past.
All seem lost in the well, black depths of yesterday,
A closed and separate eternity,
Until some mystical word — a canticle
May bid arise, bid relive some special segment of this,
Our epic which went before.

A silverine tear slides to your mouth.
A crystalline bead carves itself into thy face.

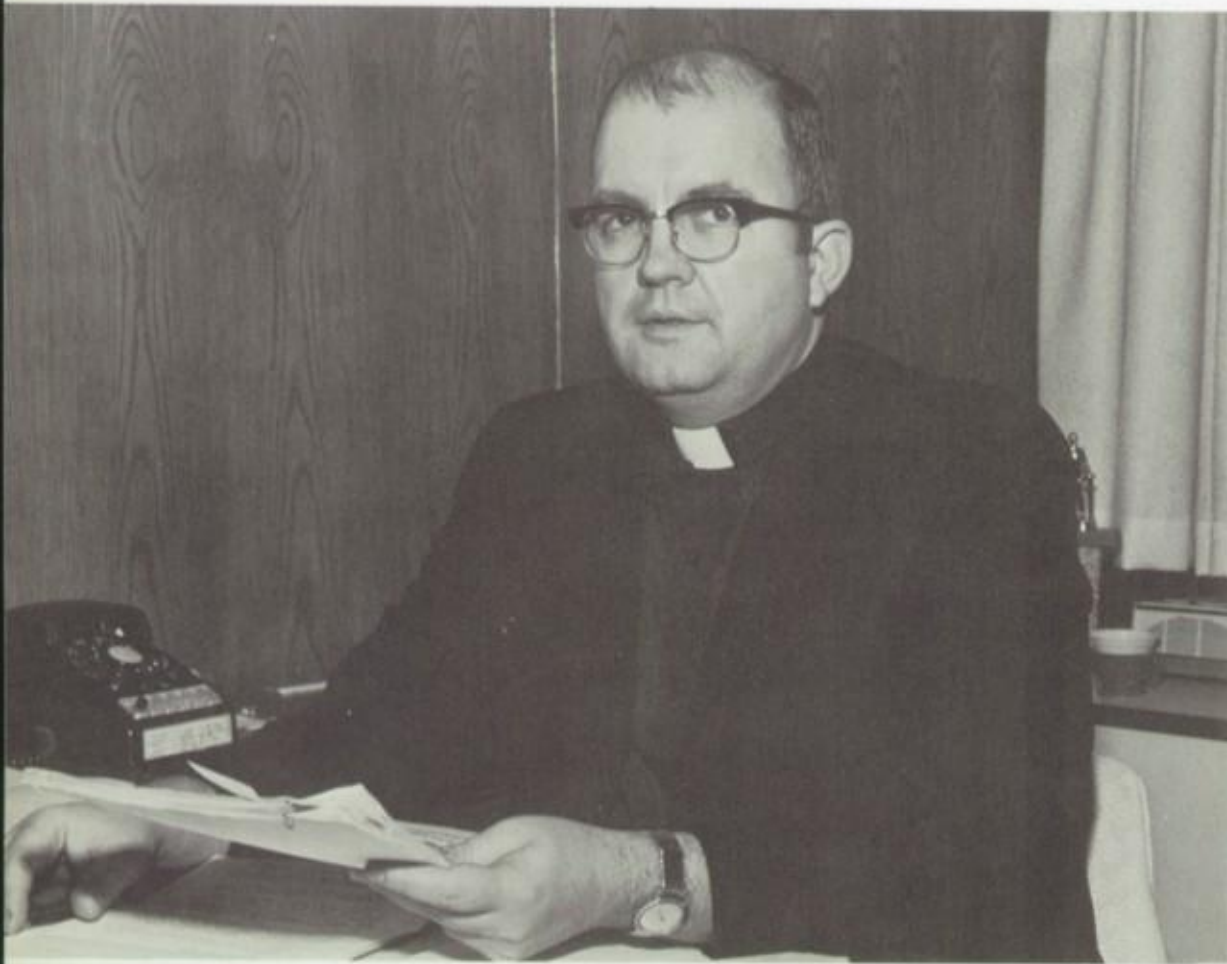

... for you were one of many components, part of this splotch of humanity which formed these last few seasons, this nine-month capsule lifetime ...

Administration

By junior year, we were on our third principal. And it looked like this one was here to stay . . .

Caught in the middle, noticing the values of both sides, recognizing both sides, choosing, moving toward the utopia in a systematic, researched, evaluative way. For we are toying with people's temperaments and careers, and walking toward the horizon haphazardly might lead to a precipice.

Grades. Discipline. Freedom. Relevancy.

It's a discovery of the amount, a limit to which we might change certain emphases within our small four-walled system safely, all the while hoping that the entire university structure, the entire educational structure, the entire business world will move toward a more personal system of evaluation.

Personal responsibility to learn. Personal responsibility to behave in a fashion which respects the opinion, the character of another. Personal responsibility to evaluate one's goals. Personal responsibility to evaluate one's accomplishments, or perhaps to admit failures and back up a few notches. Personal responsibility to become exposed to the varied and several. Personal responsibility to learn. All a part of the game. All becoming a more significant part of a somewhat revised edition of the same game.

Fr. Robert Erickson, C.S.V., B.A., M.T.S., S.T.B.
Loyola U., Catholic U.
Chairman, Math IV, Calculus, Probability, Vlatome.

A bit of change this year in the Math Department. The new chairman, Fr. Erickson, was happy to offer the seniors three new courses to choose from. Added to the traditional Calculus and Trigonometry was Probability and Statistics, which included a brief review of the history of math to add some culture to the established math regimen. A turnover in staff brought in Mr. Nowinski and Mr. Roelle, who make a fine complement (supplement?) to the staff veterans, Mr. Schwind and Fr. Erickson.

Concerning extracurricular activities, Coach Erickson again brought home a winner. After intensive drilling, the Athletics team, Capt. Bosshart, Browning, and Jenkins, competed well enough to take a third in the Loyola contest and a second in the Mu Theta Alpha contest, conquering perennial rivals Loyola and Fenwick.

Yes, father, I've seen the films and taken tomes of super-accurate data from the experiments and film loops; uh huh, yeh I studied the mimeographed summaries and the film notes, and I've scrutinized the programmed texts, and taken all the quizzes. Huh? The BOOK? No, why?

The bio men had a real philosophical field day with moratorium on biological warfare, Earth Day and all. Just waiting for an offer from Look, all of them. Bio's made big strides, though, especially for a subject of its nature — hard to consume it any other way than pedagogically. Now if you have nineteen red-eyed jocular males, sixteen green-eyed sober males, and three puce-eyed gregarious females, how many second-generation female fruit flies will be purple-eyed and moody? And better yet, gents, are butterflies Lepidoptera or Gernoptera? And thirdly, is my wrist ball-and-socket or hinge joint? Hmmmmmm?

Ol' Sister Judith became a full-fledged member of the Viator faculty, pulling through her five daily classes, transferring electrons back-and-forth from Cu to Zn, dropping truck-loads of Potassium metal into tanks of water, carving girlfriends' initials into . . . er, wood. Oh, you know, it's like golf balls rolling in the back section of a station wagon.

No, the Science Dept. can never be accused of being irrelevant as long as it continues the classroom sidetracks, sidelights and editorializings dealing with government-subsidized grandiose neutrino-detection experiments. The Dept's on its way to further expansion and experimentation, both dealing with earthworm dissection and education — (It's been rumored that some of the kids have been learning by osmosis), off to inspire mare Harveys, Plancks, and Keplers.

It was an expanding, the outcome of awareness, a cataloguing of the basic skills and the varied interests.

Tradition was destroyed by the seniors' Humanities program which hoped to expose the student to far more than the writings of the greats, by presenting him with the greats of the fine arts.

New people are new ideas and the addition of Messrs. Cella and Thompson to the hierarchy resulted in different teaching methods, new responses.

Junior and senior electives included courses in speech, drama study, creative writing and communication arts, allowing the individual to pursue his interests, specialize a bit.

English is no longer orthography, English is no longer English, it's become a study of man.

It seems traditional when writing of this department to note that language study is much more than scholastics, that it's really an enhancing of our knowledge of far-away people. Who started that, anyway?

Take heed, friend, for language is a study and has been ever since the Tower of Babel days and the mass wanderings of equally ancient Latin teachers. Ah, I remember well.

There's memorization and dialogues and dictation and dialogues and language lab — Zarkov calling earth . . . Zarkov calling earth. Come in, Mr. Rutschi . . . — and dialogues and fondue parties and just whole bunches of new and exciting words, Reconnaissez-vous les mots? etc.

New people: Sr. Rosita, Br. Moulin and Br. Aguirre and new methods — magazines, films (measuring up to the quality of those in grandpa's basement), a European tour or two — all are a far cry from the tedious grammar assignments of yesteryear and more fruitful — from the student's side, that is.

Religion Department

Fr. Stewart Schramko, C.S.V., B.A.
Loyola U., Catholic U.,
Religion, Bowling, Golf.

Religion class is somewhat like a debriefing session. You are approached (either tactfully, violently, or both, depending on the interrogator) and conned into divulging all those secrets the authoritative sisters have been chocking into your trusting mind for so many years.

A sense of satisfaction accompanies this (the pat-on-the-back sort of thing) as a certain sense of pride fills one's heart when he successfully regurgitates the entire Baltimore Catechism. This sense of accomplishment fades, however, as the smiling priest destroys Adam, Eve, Noah, burning bushes, pillars of fire and the like.

Two semesters of new improved religion electives and you are guaranteed to realize from Fr. Render's lectures, Fr. Mierz's pictures (undoubtedly borrowed from the Bio. lab) and yes, even Fr. Judd's collages, that religion is yours. You make you what you are. Yes, friends, that's all.

P.E. Department

Mr. Edward Wasielewski, B.S.
De Paul U.
Chairman of Physical Education.

The Physical Education Department provides a thrilling climax to the educational experience here at St. Viator. Staffed by three S.V. — type spartans, cleverly disguised as mild-mannered gym instructors, it fights a never-ending battle to preserve the ideals set forth by Debbie Drake before she suddenly left network television because she couldn't stop doing things in multiples of four. This year, for instance, the department augmented its supply of apparatus with a late-model Procrustean Bed and three sauna baths (Jacuzzi, of course). The home of the P.E. Dept. is the downstairs coaches office, home of the coaches when they're downstairs. From Coaches H.Q. these famous fighters of lethargy plan and execute some of the most grueling calisthenics for the purpose of supplementing education of the psyche with education of the physique, making us well-rounded people.

Yeh, I'm just a little mixed up, . . . y'know, about college and all.

Oh?

Yeh, well, my Kuder says I'm just right to be an animal breeder or an epic poet, . . . and the PSAT's, they're around 33 while the SAT's border around 750 apiece.

Oh?

Yeh, well this one guy says Eastern or bust, and this other guy (hippie) says Bucknell and Botany. I think I'll be a neurosurgeon.

Oh?

Yeh, or I'll go to IIT and study teaching.

Oh.

Picture Friday morning and fifty thousand blank transcripts and potential letters resting silently on the bureau of the official school registrix, covering the Whitman's Sampler and the Elvis Presley bumper stickers. Moment for remorse.

Just what is that funny snakish silvery tube twisting on the floor of the biology lab? Why, it's crawling into that hole in the floor. Mercy. Why they're cleaning out the sewer, cleansing the pipes.

It's not that the school runs more efficiently because of these people, it's that the school runs because they exist. Thank God for the women behind the counter and the spatulas and the men behind the hammer. Vulcan ovens forever.

Personnage Placement

Be it made official, notarized, that the following set of verbiage is depersonalization. Not rationalized depersonalization for the sake of necessary system, brevity, order — no, needless superfluous depersonalization. Revolt by armbands, posters. Tear out your index and save the rest of the book, regardless of the possible future state of the binding. Yet . . . every great piece of literary art has always had an index; who are we to break the mould?

Do you feel sufficiently depersonalized?

Terminated.
 All bcomes retrospect,
 Segment of irrevocable past.
 A history of a temporary society
 Exists whole and entire,
 A closed set,
 Collection of varied settings,
 A chain of sprinkled, very individual events —
 All meant only for then.

Made well aware that it all occurred,
 That it happened to them —
 A different sort of them,
 A youngered you.
 Four gala performances
 And a million specks of mitochondria,
 Theorems, Hawthorne and such.
 Open the inward eye:
 Remember the days of bookbags,
 Of Starbuck, the sockhop-a-week grind.
 They're all a part of you
 A part of this legend, this past,
 Though it might not seem like it now,
 Like any of it ever really existed.

The glacier's moved on, had her stay.
 Circumstance and season mould the person
 And each season and her products are unique:
 For every petty quarrel and reconciliation
 Every poker hand in the senior lounge
 Each varied and singular lunchroom interruption
 Every potential friend lost in misapprehension
 Every guitar chord, every football play
 Every minute of every wee hour spent formulating tomorrow's term paper —
 It was all a part of last night's dream.
